BRIEF OF RESPONDENT

STATEMENT OF NATURE OF CASE

The appellant, Willie Folkes, appeals from an order denying his petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

DISPOSITION IN LOWER COURT

By order dated May 14, 1968, accompanied by Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, bearing the same the trial court, Honorable Joseph G. Jeppson, denied appellant's petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

RELIEF SOUGHT ON APPEAL

Respondent submits that the trial court's order denying appellant's petition for a writ of habeas corpus should be affirmed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The respondent State of Utah submits the following statement of facts as being more consistent with the record reveals.

For the sake of clarity a distinction is made in the following sequence of events between those facts taken specifically from the transcript of the hearing in the subject case and those facts drawn from the remainder of the record. The former will be marked "T", the latter "R".

On October 11, 1966, the appellant was released on parole from the Utah State Prison (T.6). On or about April 3, 1967, while still on parole (T.7), appellant aided and abetted one Carol Ann Williams escape from the Utah State Mental Hospital at or about which time he was returned to and confined in Utah State Prison (T.8). The aforementioned aid and abetting resulted shortly thereafter in the arrest and conviction of the appellant in Orem City Court, Utah (R.13).

Approximately three weeks following the appellant's reconfinement, appellant's parole was formally revoked (May 24, 1967) (T.9). Prior to said revocation appellant petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus in the Fourth Judicial District. On July 25, 1967, following the hearing on said petition, the appellant was ordered released and his Orem City Court conviction

clared a nullity on the grounds that the Orem City it lacked proper jurisdiction to try the case (R.13).

The appellant was thereafter properly tried on ary 24, 1968, in the Fourth Judicial District on aforementioned charge of aiding and abetting an ape from the State Mental Hospital. The trial re-ted in the conviction of appellant and an 80 day son sentence. This sentence was suspended, however, the appellant released since appellant had already n imprisoned in excess of 80 days as a result of voided Orem City conviction (R.12,13).

On or about January 25, 1968, approximately one after the appellant's release, appellant allegedly aulted and battered his wife, breaking her jaw (R.11; 1,12). On February 8, 1968, the appellant was re-ned to the Utah State Prison, and on February 21, 8, appellant's parole was formally revoked by the d of pardons (T.13). It is not clear from the record to what degree this alleged assault and battery was considered by the board, since the board recognized that there had been neither a trial nor a conviction on the alleged assault and battery (R.11). Was there an admission of guilt before the board on the appellant's part (R.11). At the time of the board's hearing, however, the appellant's conviction in the 10th Judicial District was specifically referred to as grounds for revocation (R.11).

The appellant petitioned a second time for release on a writ of habeas corpus, on this occasion in the Third Judicial District. Said petition was heard about a jury on the 25th day of April, 1968, before the Honorable Joseph G. Jeppson. The plaintiff appeared in person and was represented by Robert Van Meter, Attorney at Law. The defendant, John W. Turner, en, Utah State Prison, was represented by LeRoy S. and, Assistant Attorney General. Pursuant to this ing, the appellant's petition was denied on May 1968 (R.14). An appeal from denial of the peti- was filed by appellant on May 20, 1968.

The remainder of the respondent's statement of is in essence a summation of the transcript of trial court whose judgment is the object of this al. It is of necessity repetitive in part as to ters of testimony.

During the hearing of April 25, 1968, Mr. Axland, rney for the plaintiff, initially moved for dis- sal on the grounds that there was at that time ing before the Utah Supreme Court, an appeal on aforesaid conviction of the appellant in the th Judicial District (t.3). The court denied the ion to dismiss (T.5), presumably on the basis, as ed by the attorney for appellant, that "this petitioner for writ of Habeas Corpus does not seek to review the conviction, but seeks to review the hold which has been adjudicated through the Board of Pardons, resulting in his confinement at the Utah State Prison." 3). The question remained before the court as to whether or not the parole of appellant was properly terminated (T.5).

Mr. Lawrence Morris, Executive Secretary of the Utah State Board of Pardons was thereupon called as a witness on behalf of the appellant. The witness testified on direct examination, that "upon receipt of the parole violation report submitted by the Adult Probation and Parole Department, the Board issued a warrant ordering Mr. (Willie) Folkes returned to prison for him to be scheduled at the next meeting of the Board for a parole violation." (T.8). The witness r testified that "the Board reviewed the information they had; they revoked the parole of Mr. Folkes . ." (T.9), the effective date of revocation being 24, 1967. The information referred to by the . . . and as submitted by the Adult Probation and . . . Department was specifically the conviction of . . . in Orem City Court. The witness further . . . testified that following said hearing and revocation . . . parole the Board received an order dated July 25, . . . 1, signed by the Honorable Allen B. Sorenson, Judge, . . . 4th Judicial District ordering the release of the . . . defendant, and that "based upon the fact the conviction had been set aside, they (the board) reinstated . . . on parole. We heard nothing further from the mat- . . . until he was convicted in the Fourth Judicial Dis- . . . Court on the charge." (T.9,10).

Upon further questioning by the attorney for Plaintiff, Mr. Morris testified that "some time shortly prior to February 21, 1968, the Board was again advised by the Adult Probation and Parole Department (that) Folkes had been convicted in Fourth Judicial District Court, and that he was involved in the assault on his former wife on January 25, 1968. Based upon this information, the Board again issued a warrant for his return . . . ." (T.10) which was executed on February 9, 1968. A second parole violation hearing was held on April 25, 1968. A photo copy of the transcription of said parole violation hearing was entered into Plaintiff's exhibit # 1 (T.10, R.11). Pertinent portions of this transcript were read into the record at the subject habeas corpus hearing, in particular, the statement of George Latimer, chairman and one of three members of the Board. " . . . we have signed this indicating your (appellant's) wife suffered rotten jaw, and whether you did it or not is something else. We have no conviction on that, so for time being, we will consider the first one referring to the conviction (in the Fourth Judicial District) the aiding and abetting question."

During further examination of Mr. Morris by the attorney for the plaintiff-appellant, Mr. Van Sciver said:

Q. Now do you have an opinion of the reason why Mr. Folkes was revoked by the Board of Pardons, the second time?

A. Again, I would have to state my opinion was the board apparently construed the conviction as a serious enough violation to return him to the institution (T.12).

During the cross examination of Mr. Morris by Mr. and, it was established that Mr. Morris was an Administrative officer, not a member of the Board of members and therefore had no "controlling voice in outcome of a parole revocation hearing . . . ."

14).

Q. (Mr. Axland) So you do not know then, do you, what went through the minds of these voting member? (T.14).

A. (Mr. Morris) No, sir.

Mr. Lou Bertram, an agent with the Adult Protection and Parole Department, was called as the second of the two witnesses on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant and testified that in this parole-parolee relationship with the appellant he had on two separate occasions requested that the appellant be brought before the board. In both instances the basis for his request was information of a criminal conviction of the appellant. However, the testimony leaves some doubt as to Bertran's precise information with regard to his nd request to the board (T.17).

Q. (Mr. Van Sciver) . . . did you not request he be revoked later on the Orem
City conviction, the first time?

A. I requested a warrant be issued and returned to the Utah State Prison for a parole violation hearing.

Q. . . . That was the basis of the initial request, was it not?

A. Yes.

Q. The action taken by the Orem City
Court?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that not the same basis you made the request in the second?

A. Yes.

Respondent submits that since the power to ree a parole rests solely with the Board of Pardons point of law to be discussed subsequently), and t since from the record of the subject hearing the rd recognized that the Orem City conviction had been ified prior to its second hearing on appellant's ole violation (see R.11), it then follows that Mr. tram's answer as to the basis for the second rest (stated above) is irrelevant, if correct.

Both plaintiff-appellant and the State rested ir cases at this juncture. The court thereupon ied plaintiff-appellant's motion for relief under writ of habeas corpus.

The trial court acknowledged the Orem City con-tion as a nullity (R.13), but found as a conclu-
n. of law that there had been no double jeopardy
ised as the result of the second trial and conviction

January 24, 1968, in the Fourth Judicial District (R.13). The court further found that the conviction of January 24, 1968, constituted a violation of plaintiff-appellant's executed parole agreement, this despite the fact that the conviction resulted in a suspended sentence (R.13,14).

ARGUMENT

POINT I

THE BOARD OF PARDONS ACTED WITHIN THE SCOPE OF ITS AUTHORITY IN REVOKING THE APPELLANT'S PAROLE.

OHIO CODE ANN. § 77-62-17 (1953).

With regard to the historical development and use of parole, attention is drawn to a leading article on the subject of the revocation of conditional liberty. In particular, to what protections, if any, circumscribe its revocation. Due Process and Revocation of Conditional Liberty, 12 Wayne Law Review, 638-656

1966). In this article it is stated that of the three types of conditional releases, i.e., parole, probation and conditional pardon, the use of parole in the states as well as in the federal system has never existed without enabling legislation. People v. Bondoni, 263 Mich. 295, 248 N.W. 627 (1933). Nor is such legislation authorizing the grant of conditional liberty constitutionally compelled. Ughbanks v. Armstrong, 208 U.S. 481 (1908); People v. Bondoni, Ida. Statutes providing for post-conviction parole procedures may be characterized as acts of grace by the state, Burns v. United States, 287 U.S. 216 (1932); People v. Stevens, 190 F. Supp. 938 (1960); Woodward v. Woodcock, 124 Ind. 439, 24 N.E. 1047 (1890). Such statutes are typically phrased in broad discretionary language. 18 U.S.C. § 4203 (1948); Utah Code Ann. § 7-2 (1953). Moreover, the determination of whether or not to grant conditional liberty is solely within the power of the appointed authorities, whose decision involves "a discretionary assessment . . .

(or) what a man is and what he may become rather than simply what he has done." Kadish, The Advocate and the Expert - Counsel in the Peno - Correctional Process, Minn. L. Rev. 813 (1961).

It appears that the appellant bases his appeal on an alleged denial of due process and equal protection of the law. Specifically:

1. It is alleged that appellant was twice punished for the same crime.

2. It is alleged that appellant was not advised of the right to have benefit of counsel during the revocation proceedings against him, nor was he represented by counsel at his hearing before the Board of Pardons.

It is alleged that appellant's parole was unlawfully revoked in that said revocation lacked basis other than a mere whim of the Board of Prisons.

The respondent denies any violation of due process or equal protection of the law in all matters relevant to appellant's cause.

1. In answer to the matter of alleged double jeopardy, respondent refers to the first conclusion of law as made and entered by the Third Judicial District Court of trial, the Honorable Joseph G. Jeppsen presiding. "That there has in fact been no double jeopardy raised against this petitioner in that the proceeding in Orem City was declared on or about 25, 1967, by the Honorable Allen Sorenson, disbarred judge of the Fourth Judicial District, to be a nullity." (R.3). Respondent asks that the trial court retained in its judgment on this issue.

2. In answer to the question of whether or not appellant has the right to be represented by counsel during parole revocation proceedings or to what degree, if any, there exists a duty of the Board so to advise appellant of such right, respondent against refers to Wayne Law Review 652-654 (1966) which specifically addresses this issue and its various treatment,

. . . the states are further restricted by the equal protection clause. This constitutional right is significant in those states assigning different rights in revocation proceedings involving different types of conditional liberty. Inasmuch as the types of conditional liberty are different in name and derivation only, and have the same substantive characteristics, legislation allowing counsel in probation revocation hearings but not parole revocation hearings arguably would be a denial of equal protection to the parolee . . . .

There would appear to be no reason for a difference in the protection of the rights granted a parolee as distinguished from those granted a probationer. Without such reason, legislation establishing such dichotomy might be considered arbitrary and violative of equal protection.

The strongest case for the application of equal protection involves the indigent defendant. Most statutes allowing for counsel at revocation hearings limit such right to 'counsel of one's own choice', i.e., Mich. Comp. Laws § 791.240 (1948), Mich. Stat. Ann. § 28.2310 (1954). The equal protection argument has been dismissed on the theory that Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335 (1963) which established the right to appointed counsel at felony trials and Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201 (1964) extending this right to all stages of the criminal proceedings, are inapplicable to revocation hearings, which are not criminal prosecutions. Jones v. Rivers, 338 F.2d 862 (4th Cir. 1964). However, Chief Judge Sobeloff, in a concurring opinion, at 876, suggests that distinctions between indigents and those with means is not warranted in view of Griffin v. Illinois, 351 U.S. 12 (1956). . . (the) argument that counsel must be provided to an indigent probationer or parolee is not based on a theory that a revocation hearing is a criminal prosecution. It merely rests on the proposition that where a statute provides for counsel of one's choice, a prisoner unable to hire private counsel has a right to have counsel appointed. Hoffman v. State, 404 P.2d 644 (Alaska 1965). In other words, the argument recognizes that a state need not make any provision for counsel at revocation hearings since Escoe v. Zerbst, 295 U.S. 490 (1935) obviates such requirement. However, if the state does make such provision it must apply to the indigent as well or constitute a denial of equal protection of the laws.

. . . In states granting a hearing but not detailing the incidental rights, the defendant is usually entitled to present witnesses, cross-examine adverse witnesses, and obtain the aid of counsel. States having no explicit statutory provisions referring to notice and hearing normally provide a hearing although it is often just an informal interview. Thus, irrespective of the lack of constitutional compulsion, most states provide those rights associated with procedural due process and considered fundamental to a deprivation of liberty.

Utah Code Ann. § 77-62-17 does not specifically provide a parolee right to a hearing prior to revocation of parole. "The Board of Pardons is empowered to terminate at any time, the parole of any offender." Ex parte Harris, 108 U. 407, 160 P.2d 721 (1945) states the principle that the Board has power to revoke parole without affording prisoner any hearing. As a matter of privilege but not right, Utah Code Ann. § 77-62-16 states that the "board of pardons shall permit an offender reimprisoned for parole violation to be present at its next regular meeting." Respondent submits by not providing for the right to a hearing it means that the State of Utah is effectively removed from any question of equal protection under the laws, specifically with regard to the allegation of the petitioner that he was unlawfully denied benefit of counsel at his parole revocation hearing.<sup>1</sup> Respondent petitioner submits that the laws of the State of Utah

---

The subject appeal is factually and procedurally distinguished from Mempa v. Rhay, 389 U.S. 128, 8 S. Ct. 254 (1967), wherein the petitioner was convicted of an offense upon a plea of guilty entered with the advice of court-appointed counsel and thereafter put on probation. Sentence was deferred according to Washington Law. Subsequently, at the hearing in which petitioner was not represented by counsel, the court revoked petitioner's probation and passed sentence. The Supreme Court of the State of Washington denied petition for writ of habeas corpus, but the Supreme Court of the United States reversed on writ of certiorari, holding that in a case where an accused agreed to plea guilty, although he had a valid defense, because he was denied probation, absence of counsel at the imposition of the deferred sentence might well result in denial of the right to appeal.

not place a duty on the Board of Pardons to give the parolee of any right to counsel at his revocation hearing in that (1) the code of criminal procedure is silent on the matter, and (2) as previously stated, there exists no right, as such, to a revocation hearing. Rose v. Haskins, 388 F.2d 91 (1968) 1st Cir.; Williams v. Patterson, 389 F.2d 374 (1968) 1st Cir.; Gonzales v. Patterson, 370 F.2d 94 (1966) 1st Cir.

3. In answer to the appellant's claim that his parole was revoked at the whim of the Board of Pardons and therefore lacked any proper basis, the respondent directs the courts attention once again to the transcript of the trial court wherein two possible bases for said revocation are recorded. One is the alleged assault and battery of the appellant's wife. The other was had at the time of appellant's revocation hearing

igned records indicating (his) wife suffered a broken
... ." However, the Board apparently placed
... if any weight on this charge since they had ... no conviction on that." (T.12). As to the ... possible basis for revocation, specifically
... appellant's conviction dated January 24, 1968, in ... Fourth Judicial District Court, State of Utah, of ... crime of aiding and abetting an escape from the ... State Hospital (R.14), this is a matter of record
... as such is an irrefutable basis for revocation of ... parole. Furthermore, it is clear that at the time
... appellant's revocation hearing, the Board had ... specific knowledge of said conviction and put great
... weight upon it as grounds for appellant's parole re... vocation (R.11 - the transcript of said parole viola... tion hearing). Respondent maintains that it is clear ... from the record that the Board's consideration of pellant's case and its subsequent decision to revoke pellant's parole were not arbitrary or in any sense manifestation of mere whim. Therefore, there was violation of due process by the Board of Pardons.

Indeed, an effective conditional liberty system ultimately depends upon fair treatment of the parolee, the threat of arbitrary revocation does not en-rage or aid the process of rehabilitation of the conditionally released prisoner. See Burns v. United States, 287 U.S. 216 (1932); 65 Harv. L. Rev. 309 (1951); Wayne L. Rev. 650. The discretionary power of the Board is broad but not unlimited, and the reversal of parole revocation may be the result of its misuse. Swan v.
United States, 200 Md. 420, 90 A.2d 690 (1952); United States
rel. De Lucie v. O'Donover, 82 F. Supp. 435 (N.D.
Cal. 1948), affirmed, 178 F.2d 876 (7th Cir. 1949), cert. den., 340 U.S. 886 (1950). Examples of abuse which would call for revocation are "suspicion of conduct not proven," United States v. Van Riper, 12 F.2d 816 (2nd Cir. 1938) wherein it is stated although the state normally bears the burden of proving a violation, "no probation statute specifies degree of proof necessary to meet this burden." 12 U.S. L. Rev. 311, 332 (1959) as cited in 12 Wayne Rev. 651. Normally, the evidence required to reverse is that which satisfies the judge; proof beyond reasonable doubt is not required. Manning v. United States, 161 F.2d 827 (5th Cir. 1947); Blaylock v. State, 12 App. 880, 78 S.E.2d 537 (1953), cited in 12 U.S. L. Rev. 651. It is submitted that these limitations were not violated by the trial court, and that the court correctly found no whim or caprice by the Board of Parole in its revocation of appellant's parole.

The Law of Utah makes it clear that the Board of

of the State of Utah is a constitutionally established body, Utah Const. art. 7, § 12, with exclusive authority to remit fines and forfeitures, commute punishments, and grant pardons after convictions . . . ." See also Cardico v. Davis, 91 U. 323, 26 P.2d 216 (1937). The statutes of this state grant the Board of Pardons broad discretionary powers to take paroles and reincarcerate parolees. "All prisoners released on parole, pursuant to the provisions hereof, shall remain in the legal custody and under the control of the chief adult parole and adult protection officer, and shall be subject at any time to be retaken to the institution from which he was paroled at such time as his sentence is terminated. Full power is granted to retake and reimprison any convict upon parole granted by the board of pardons, whose written order is certified by its secretary shall be sufficient rest for all officers authorized to make arrests, other persons named therein, to return to actual custody any such prisoner." Utah Code Ann. § 77-62-16 (1953). This statute is essentially a restatement of the principle of law set out in McCoy v. Harris, 108 Utah 160 P.2d 721 (1945) which states that "violation of rules for the conduct of a paroled prisoner is similar to a violation of rules within the prison and constitutes an abuse of the privilege for which the privilege may be withdrawn, and the rules confer no legal right."

CONCLUSION

The respondent maintains that on the basis of the facts of this case, the laws of this State, and the existing continuum of the law of the United States, there can be little doubt that the Board of Pardons is well within the scope of its authority in releasing the parole of the appellant. The respondent before submits that the trial court's order denyappellant's petition for a writ of habeas corpus should be affirmed.
