STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

Utah Code Ann. § 49-11-613 allows a person who is dissatisfied by a decision of the Utah State Retirement Board (“Board”) to “obtain judicial review by complying with the procedures and requirements of Title 63, Chapter 46b, Administrative Procedures Act.”

Utah Code Ann. §63-46b-16 confers jurisdiction on the Supreme Court or Court of Appeals to review all final agency action resulting from formal adjudicative hearings. Utah Code Ann. §78-2a-3(2)(a) and Rule 14 of the Utah Rules of Appellate Procedure confer jurisdiction on the Court of Appeals over the final orders and decrees resulting from formal adjudicative proceedings.

STATEMENT OF ISSUES

1. Is Ms. Montierth (“Petitioner”) precluded from raising issues of due process, statutory construction, and evidentiary errors by failing to raise them before the administrative hearing officer (“AHO”)?
2. If Petitioner can survive her failure to raise due process issues before the AHO, did the Utah State Retirement Board (“Board”) grant Petitioner constitutional procedural due process by granting her a formal administrative hearing?

3. If Petitioner can survive her failure to raise due process issues before the AHO, does Petitioner have an individual property interest in her late husband's retirement benefit to invoke the due process clause?
4. If Petitioner can survive her failure to raise statutory construction issues before the AHO, does the plain language of Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405(2) grant Petitioner any retirement benefit as the spouse of a retiree?
5. If Petitioner can survive her failure to raise evidentiary errors before the AHO, did the AHO err in admitting and considering Petitioner's hearsay testimony and interpreting the hearsay rule to preclude a finding of fact based solely on hearsay under Utah Code Ann. §63-46b-10(3)?
6. Was Mr. Montierth's signed and notarized retirement application valid and complete pursuant to Utah Code Ann. § 49-13-402?

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Under the Utah Administrative Procedures Act ("UAPA"), Utah Code Ann. § 63-46b-16(4) specifically enumerates the relief which this Court may grant on an appeal from a formal administrative hearing before the Board. Utah Code Ann. §63-46b-16(4) states:

The appellate court shall grant relief only if, on the basis of the agency's record, it determines that a person seeking judicial review has been substantially prejudiced by one of the following:

- (a) the agency action, or the statute or rule on which the agency action is based, is unconstitutional on its face or as applied;

- (b) the agency has acted beyond the jurisdiction conferred by any statute;
- (c) the agency has not decided all of the issues requiring resolution;
- (d) the agency has erroneously interpreted or applied the law;
- (e) the agency has engaged in an unlawful procedure or decision-making process, or has failed to follow prescribed procedure;
- (f) the persons taking the agency action were illegally constituted as a decision-making body or were subject to disqualification;
- (g) the agency action is based upon a determination of fact, made or implied by the agency, that is not supported by substantial evidence when viewed in light of the whole record before the court;
- (h) the agency action is:
 - (i) an abuse of the discretion delegated to the agency by statute;
 - (ii) contrary to a rule of the agency;
 - (iii) contrary to the agency's prior practice, unless the agency justifies the inconsistency by giving facts and reasons that demonstrate a fair and rational basis for the inconsistency; or
 - (iv) otherwise arbitrary or capricious.

Mrs. Kathy Montierth ("Petitioner") failed to point to any specific subsection for relief under Section 63-46b-16(4) where the Board erred. The Utah Court of Appeals has duly noted that "Because the standard of review under UAPA will vary based on the subsection the claim is brought under, we strongly encourage counsel to clearly identify under what section review is being sought and to make certain they identify the appropriate standard of review under that section." King v. Industrial Com'n of Utah, 850 P.2d 1281,1287 n.7 (Utah Ct. App. 1993)(emphasis added).

Even though Petitioner failed to point to the applicable error section under Utah Code Ann. §63-46b-16(4), it seems axiomatic that Petitioner's issues she failed to raise before the administrative hearing officer should be reviewed de novo by this Court.

However, on issues of fact, "[a]n agency's findings of fact . . . are accorded substantial deference and will not be overturned if based on substantial evidence, even if another conclusion from the evidence is permissible." Murphy v. State Retirement Bd., 2004 UT App. 109, *1 (Ut. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 94 P.3d 929 (July 19, 2004); quoting, Hurley v. Board of Review of Ind. Com'n, 767 P.2d 524, 526-27 (Utah 1988). "Substantial evidence is 'such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion.'" Id; quoting, Grace Drilling Co. v. Board of Review, 776 P.2d 63, 68 (Utah Ct. App. 1989) (quotations and citations omitted). The Appellate Court does not conduct a de novo credibility determination or reweigh the evidence. Questar Pipeline Co. v. Utah State Tax Com'n, 850 P.2d 1175, 1178 (Utah 1993). Nor will an agency's findings of fact be overturned if based on substantial evidence, even if another conclusion from the evidence is permissible. Hurley, 767 P.2d 524 at 526-27. It is the province of the agency, not the Appellate Court, to resolve conflicting evidence, and where inconsistent inferences can be drawn from the same evidence, it is for the agency to draw the inference. Albertsons Inc. v. Dept. of Employment Security, 854 P.2d 570, 575 (Utah Ct. App. 1993).

Similarly, the Appellate Court will grant deference to the agency's interpretation or application of law when "there is a grant of discretion to the agency concerning the language in question, either expressly made in the statute or implied from the statutory language." Morton Int'n., Inc. v. Auditing Division, 814 P.2d 581, 589 (Utah 1991). "Where a grant exists, [the Appellate Court] will not disturb the agency's interpretation or application of the law unless its determination exceeds the bounds of reasonableness and rationality." King, 850 P.2d 1281 at 1286. The Utah Court of Appeals has interpreted such a grant of discretion broadly. See, Id., at 1288 (After reviewing examples of grants of discretion to agencies, the Court states, "In each case the language of the statute and the statutory scheme support a finding of at least an implicit grant of discretion.").

Here, the legislature granted to the Board the general power to "develop broad policy for the . . . various . . . programs under broad discretion . . . , including the specific authority to interpret and define any provision or term under this title . . . [.]” Utah Code Ann. § 49-11-203(1)(k). Thus, since the Legislature granted express authority to the Board to make legal determinations under Utah Code Ann. Title 49, this Court should not disturb the Board's interpretations of law unless they "exceed the bounds of reasonableness and rationality." King, 850 P.2d 1281 at 1286.¹

DETERMINATIVE STATUTORY PROVISIONS

Utah Code Ann. §49-13-401 states,

(1) A member is qualified to receive an allowance from this system when:

(a) the member ceases actual work for a participating employer in this system before the member's retirement date and provides evidence of the termination;

(c) one of the following conditions is met as of the member's retirement date:

(i) the member has accrued at least four years of service credit and has attained an age of 65 years;

(ii) the member has accrued at least ten years of service credit and has attained an age of 62 years;

(iii) the member has accrued at least 20 years of service credit and has attained an age of 60 years;

(iv) the member has accrued at least 30 years of service credit; or

(v) the member has accrued at least 25 years of service credit, in which case the member shall be subject to the reduction under Subsection 49-13-402(2)(b).

(2) (a) The member's retirement date shall be the 1st or the 16th day of the month, as selected by the member, but the retirement date must be on or after the date of termination.

(b) The retirement date may not be more than 90 days before or after the date the application is received by the office.

Board's statutory authority. See, Hilton v. State Retirement Bd., 2005 UT App 408 (Utah Ct. App. 2005). The Court cited Epperson v. Utah State Retirement Bd., 949 P.2d 779, 781 (Utah Ct. App. 1997), but since the Epperson decision, and in response to the Epperson decision, the legislature has granted the Board express permission to make legal determinations concerning its applicable statutes. See, Id.

SUMMARY OF THE PROCEEDINGS

Ms. Kathy Montierth (“Petitioner”) filed a Request for Board Action on March 21, 2005, requesting the Utah State Retirement Board (hereinafter “Board”) grant her request “to honor the intention of Mr. Montierth and provide Plan 3 joint life benefits to Ms. Montierth.” Hearing Record (hereinafter “HR”) at 6. A hearing was held on August 22, 2005, before the Administrative Hearing Officer (hereinafter “AHO”), James Barker, on Petitioner’s Request for Board Action. Petitioner was represented by Rocky D. Crofts of Smith Knowles, P.C. The Board was represented by David B. Hansen. At the conclusion of the testimony, the AHO ruled in favor of the Board and directed Mr. Hansen, counsel for the Board, to draft a proposed Order. See, Hearing Transcript (hereinafter “HT”) at 50:13. On August 31, 2005, David B. Hansen sent a letter to Rocky D. Crofts with the enclosed proposed order for his approval as to form, or in the alternative, directions to file objections to the order. See, HR 54. Rocky D. Crofts signed the order indicating that it was approved as to form. See, HR 59. The Order was then signed by the AHO on August 13, 2005. See, HR 58. The Board adopted the Final Order on October 13, 2005. See, Id. Petitioner then filed a Request for Board Reconsideration on October 27, 2005. See, HR 62. A Petition for Review of Administrative Order was filed by Petitioner on November 10, 2005. See, HR 66. The Board filed a Response on December 8, 2005, denying Petitioner’s request for reconsideration. See, HR 69. Petitioner filed her Petition for Review in this matter on October 14, 2005.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE/ FACTUAL BACKGROUND

1. Wesley V. Montierth (“Mr. Montierth”) was a member of the Public Employees’ Noncontributory Retirement System (“PERS”). See, HR 47.
2. PERS is administered by the Utah State Retirement Office (“Office”). See, Utah Code Ann. §49-11-201(1)(b).
3. Prior to his retirement, Mr. Montierth contacted the Office concerning his retirement benefits and requested and received three Retirement Benefit Estimates (“Estimates”). See, HT 36:5-6, HR 50-53. These estimates were to assist Mr. Montierth in making his retirement decisions.
4. In order to meet the eligibility requirements to retire with 30 years of service credit, Mr. Montierth made a purchase of future service credit amounting to $35,871.44, on July 2, 2002. See, HT 38:21-22, 39:18, 42:19-20.
5. On August 16, 2002, Mr. Montierth filed an Application for Service Retirement (“Application”) with the Office for a July 16, 2002, retirement date. See, HR 47.
6. On his Application, Petitioner selected retirement “Plan 1.” See, HT 37:7; HR 47.
7. On August 16, 2002, Mr. Montierth had his signature on his completed Application notarized by Ms. Ann Hancock Young, a retirement counselor, and submitted his application to the Office for processing. See, HR 47.
8. Mr. Montierth expressly asserted by signing the Application:

In accordance with the statutes governing the Utah Retirement Systems, I make application for retirement benefits. I understand the limitations as described on the reverse side of this form. I hereby certify that the information provided on this form and any of the attached forms is true correct, and complete to the best of my knowledge.

Id.

9. For 27 months, Mr. Montierth received and benefited from a Plan One retirement benefit which provided substantially more in retirement benefits than a Plan Three, or any other retirement plan benefit. See, HT 35:18-22.
10. Petitioner testified at the hearing that Mr. Montierth “opted for one [retirement benefit] that paid out a little bit more higher up front.” HT 25:21-22.
11. Mr. Montierth passed away on October 20, 2004, from an apparent suicide. See, HT 36:1-2.
12. Petitioner is the surviving spouse of Mr. Montierth. See, HT 5:7-10.
13. At the administrative hearing before the AHO, Petitioner’s sole argument was that her husband, Mr. Montierth, mistakenly selected retirement Plan One and meant to select retirement Plan Three on his Application. See, HT 17:5-6.
14. At the hearing, Petitioner failed to provide any evidence outside of her own self-serving testimony that Mr. Montierth mistakenly selected retirement Plan One and meant to select another retirement plan on his Application. See, HT 1:1-50:15.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Following a formal administrative hearing, Petitioner mistakenly raises due process, statutory construction, and evidentiary issues for the first time on appeal. Petitioner admits to the Court's general rule that the Appellate Court "will not consider an issue brought for the first time on appeal . . ." State v. Nelson-Waggoner, 2004 UT 29, 94 P.3d 186, 189 (Utah 2004). See also, State v. Lopez, 886 P.2d 1105, 1113 (Utah 1994); State v. Archambeau, 820 P.2d 920, 922 (Utah App. 1991). This rule applies equally to administrative proceedings as district court proceedings. Brown & Root Indus. Service v. Industrial Com'n of Utah, 947 P.2d 671, 677 (Utah Ct. App. 1997). Although this rule has exceptions, Petitioner fails to provide sufficient legal or factual analysis as to why she should be allowed to raise these claims under those exceptions.

Utah Courts have only recognized two limited exceptions to the preservation rule – 1) "plain error" by the trier of fact, and 2) "exceptional circumstances." See e.g., State v. Winfield, 2006 UT 4, 2006 WL 73758, at 3 (Utah 2006); State v. Archambeau, 820 P.2d 920 (Utah Ct. App. 1991). Petitioner can prove neither.

First, Petitioner cannot prove plain error because she failed to show, "(i) [a]n error exists, (ii) the error should have been obvious to the trial court, and (iii) the error is harmful.'" State v. Pecht, 2002 UT 41, ¶ 18, 48 P.2d 931, 936 (Utah 2002), quoting, State v. Dunn, 850 P.2d 1201, 1208 (Utah 1993). Far from being able to meet all these elements as required to invoke this exception, Petitioner cannot even meet one of the elements to invoke “plain error.” As such, Petitioner cannot invoke the plain error exception to the preservation rule on her issues of due process, statutory construction, and evidentiary issues which were not raised before the AHO.

Second, Petitioner does not qualify under the exceptional circumstances exception to the preservation rule because she cannot show any exception circumstance or “rare procedural anomaly” to invoke the exception. State v. Irwin, 924 P.2d 5, 11 (Utah Ct. App. 1996), quoting, State v. Dunn, 850 P.2d 1201, 1209, n.3 (Utah 1993)(finding exceptional circumstances exception is “ill-defined, and applies primarily to rare procedural anomalies. . . .”). Thus, Petitioner cannot sustain a claim for the first time on appeal because she cannot meet either of the exceptions to the general preservation rule.

Even if Petitioner could maintain a claim for violations of procedural due process without preserving the issue below, the Board granted Petitioner a formal administrative hearing where she was given wide latitude to present any claim for additional retirement benefits. Petitioner admits that at the formal hearing she received notice, obtained legal counsel, called witnesses, presented evidence, and cross-examined Board witnesses. See, Hearing Record (hereinafter “HR”) 5, Hearing Transcript (hereinafter “HT”) 3:1-3, 4:2-3, 16:2-4, 40-49. In fact, no allegation has been made, and indeed no credible allegation can be made, that the Board did not follow its constitutional formal administrative proceedings to the letter in denying Petitioner's claim.

But even if Petitioner could sustain a claim for procedural due process despite not raising it below and receipt of a formal administrative hearing, Petitioner has not been deprived of an individual vested property interest to invoke the due process clause. The Court has stated, "Under Utah law, public pension and retirement systems give rise to vested contractual rights." Hom v. Utah Dep't of Public Safety, 962 P.2d 95 (Utah Ct App 1998)(emphasis added). A member of the retirement systems vests in his/her contractual rights when he meets all the conditions precedent to receive retirement benefits. See, Utah Public Employees Ass'n. v. State of Utah, 2006 UT 9, ¶29 (Utah Ct. App. 2006) citing, Hom, 962 P.2d at 100. These vested contractual rights constitute a property interest. Conversely, those without vested contractual rights do not have a property interest in a retirement benefit. Because Petitioner did not have an individual vested contract right to any retirement benefit of her late husband, she also had no individual property right to such a benefit. As such, she cannot invoke the due process clause relating to deprivations of property.

Similarly, despite not raising the issue before the AHO, Petitioner is not eligible for a benefit under Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405 because she misreads the plain language of the statute. After receiving a retirement benefit, Mr. Montierth was defined as a retiree, and not a member. Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405(2) states, "Upon the request of a deceased member's lawful spouse at the time of the member's death, the deceased member is considered to have retired under Option Three on the first day of the month following the month in which the member died . . .”. (emphasis added). Utah Code Ann. §49-11-102(22)(a) defines “member” as, “a person, except a retiree, with contributions on deposit with a system . . .”. (emphasis added). A “retiree” is defined as “an individual who has qualified for an allowance under this title.” Utah Code Ann. §49-11-102(34). Because Mr. Montierth, after receiving a retirement allowance, was a retiree, not a member, at the time of Mr. Montierth’s death, Petitioner was a retiree’s spouse, not a member’s spouse. As such, Petitioner cannot prove entitlement to any additional benefit as the spouse of a retiree.

Petitioner’s allegations of evidentiary errors by the AHO were also not raised below and are precluded on appeal. Yet, even if these evidentiary issues had been properly preserved, the Board committed no error in admitting and considering all Petitioner’s evidence and making a finding concerning Mr. Montierth’s intent to select a different retirement plan than plan one. Petitioner simply points to no credible evidence that the AHO made or failed to make any required finding of fact given her evidence.

Even if Petitioner could point to some error in admitting evidence, such an error would be harmless error because Utah Code Ann. §49-11-607 precludes any finding for Petitioner. Subsection (1) states, “After the retirement date, which shall be set by a member in the member’s application for retirement, no alteration, addition, or cancellation of a benefit may be made. . . .” Thus, even Mr.

Montierth, let alone his spouse, could not change his retirement plan selection after his retirement date which he set in his application.

Finally, the only issue Petitioner raised before the AHO that is not precluded from consideration before this Court under the preservation rule is whether Mr. Montierth's retirement application was legally complete. Utah Code Ann. §49-13-401 states, "A member is qualified to receive an allowance from this system when: . . . the member has submitted to the office a notarized retirement application form that states the member's proposed retirement date; . . ." The plain language of the statute dictates that in order to be accepted to effectuate benefits, a retirement application must contain: 1) a selection of a retirement date, and 2) a notarized signature of the member. It is undisputed that Mr. Montierth's application contained both a selection of a retirement date and a notarized signature of Mr. Montierth. Thus, his retirement application was complete and valid to effectuate his benefits.

ARGUMENT

I. PETITIONER FAILED TO RAISE THE MAJORITY OF HER APPELLATE ARGUMENTS AND ISSUES BEFORE THE ADMINISTRATIVE HEARING OFFICER, THEREBY PRECLUDING HER FROM RAISING THEM FOR THE FIRST TIME ON APPEAL.

In her appeal to this Court, Petitioner wrongfully raises issues of constitutional due process, statutory interpretation of Utah Code Ann. § 49-13-405(2), and errors by the Administrative Hearing Officer ("AHO") which she failed to raise before the AHO.² Petitioner admits to the Court’s general rule that the Appellate Court “will not consider an issue brought for the first time on appeal . . .” State v. Nelson-Waggoner, 2004 UT 29, 94 P.3d 186, 189 (Utah 2004). See also, State v. Lopez, 886 P.2d 1105, 1113 (Utah 1994); State v. Archambeau, 820 P.2d 920, 922 (Utah App. 1991). This rule applies equally to administrative proceedings as it does to district court proceedings. Brown & Root Indus. Service v. Industrial Com'n of Utah, 947 P.2d 671, 677 (Utah Ct. App. 1997)(“The rule that courts should not reach issues on review that were not raised before an administrative agency is so basic and necessary to orderly procedure that we will enforce it despite the lack of a timely objection by [either party.]”). This general rule has been of such importance to the Court that it has “been incorporated into the briefing requirements of the Utah Rules of Appellate Procedure. Rule 24 provides that each issue presented for review in an appellant’s brief must cite to the record, showing that the issue was preserved in the trial court . . .” State v. Irwin, 924 P.2d 5, 7, n.2 (Utah Ct. App. 1996). Even constitutional issues, like the due process issues alleged by Petitioner, cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. See e.g., State v. Archambeau, 820 P.2d 920, 925 (Utah 1991)(“We conclude that a defendant may not assert a constitutional issue for the first time on appeal unless he can demonstrate ‘plain error’ or ‘exceptional circumstances.’”);

² The only issue Petitioner raised which she legitimately preserved below was her argument concerning the validity of Mr. Montierth’s retirement application. This argument was of such minor importance to Petitioner that she spent only one paragraph, and five sentences on it. The Board’s response to this argument is discussed infra at 45.

Pratt v. City Council of City of Riverton, 639 P.2d 172, 173-74 (Utah 1981)(holding that the general preservation rule “applies equally to constitutional issues . . .”); State v. Buford, 820 P.2d 1381, 1384 (Utah App. 1991). In addition, the Court stated the policy behind the general preservation rule as, “in the interest of orderly procedure, the trial court ought to be given an opportunity to address a claimed error and, if appropriate, correct it.” State v. Eldredge, 773 P.2d 29, 36 (Utah 1989). See also, State v. Holgate, 2000 UT 74, ¶ 11, 10 P.3d 346, 350 (Utah 2000).

Utah Courts have only recognized two limited exceptions to this general rule – 1) “plain error” by the trier of fact, and 2) “exceptional circumstances.”³ See e.g., State v. Winfield, 2006 UT 4, 2006 WL 73758, at *3 (Utah 2006); State v. Archambeau, 820 P.2d 920 (Utah Ct. App. 1991). Although Petitioner correctly identified the two recognized exceptions to the Preservation Rule in her brief, she failed to point out which exception applied, or if they both applied, how they both applied to the facts of her case. In failing to identify the elements or legal analysis of either exception, Petitioner then wrongly implies that these two exceptions are really one and the same when using the singular noun “exception” in stating her

“four reasons to invoke the exception.” Petitioner’s Brief at 21. Petitioner compounds her misunderstanding of the law in suggesting that these exceptions are so broad that they “encompass any situation . . . in the interests of justice.” Petitioner’s Brief at 20. This is simply untrue. The Court has consistently reiterated that plain error and exceptional circumstances are two different exceptions, and that these exceptions are the only recognized exceptions to the general preservation rule. State v. Winfield, 2006 UT 4, ¶ 14, 2006 WL 73758, *3 (Utah 2006).

A. PETITIONER’S ISSUES RAISED ON APPEAL FAIL TO MEET ANY OF THE REQUIRED ELEMENTS OF “PLAIN ERROR” TO INVOKE THIS EXCEPTION TO THE PRESERVATION RULE.

Not only does Petitioner fail to meet all of the elements of the plain error exception as required to invoke this exception to the preservation rule, she cannot meet even one element of showing plain error. “To establish plain error, an appellant must demonstrate that ‘(i) [a]n error exists, (ii) the error should have been obvious to the trial court, and (iii) the error is harmful.’” State v. Pecht, 2002 UT 41, ¶ 18, 48 P.2d 931, 936 (Utah 2002), quoting, State v. Dunn, 850 P.2d 1201, 1208 (Utah 1993). “If any one of these requirements is not met, plain error is not established.” State v. Dunn, 850 P.2d 1201, 1209 (Utah 1993).⁴

⁴ Petitioner mistakenly opines that “manifest injustice” was the same as “plain error” by citing to State v. Verde, 770 P.2d 116, 121-22 (Utah 1989) and implies that this is the test for plain error. Petitioner’s Brief at 20. This analysis is incorrect as applied to this case. What Petitioner failed to realize is that the Verde Court defined the parameters of the specific phrase “manifest injustice” found in

1. PETITIONER FAILED TO DEMONSTRATE ANY ERROR BY THE AHO OR THE BOARD.

First, Petitioner failed to specifically demonstrate that “an error exists.”

Petitioner’s allegations of error by the Board which she failed to raise before the AHO are threefold: 1) procedural due process, 2) failure to follow Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405, 3) failure of AHO to decide all the issues by failing to consider evidence. In none of these instances did Petitioner demonstrate error by the Board.⁵

Rule 19(c) of the Utah Rules of Criminal Procedure, and not the exception to the preservation rule. The Verde Court stated, “The question presented by the instant case is how the standard of ‘manifest injustice,’ made applicable to instructional errors through rule 19(c) of the Utah Rules of Criminal Procedure, fits within those categories of error.” Id. Criminal Procedure Rule 19(c) deals with a lack of objections to jury instructions. This case, on the other hand, is a civil administrative case, and was not tried before a jury. In fact, after hearing argument that “manifest injustice” was a separate exception to the preservation rule, the Utah Supreme Court recently implied that the “manifest injustice” argument was limited to Rule 19(c) cases in stating, “. . . a remedy under rule 19(c) is not available to Mr. Nelson-Waggoner because he has not contested any jury instructions.” State v. Nelson-Waggoner, 2004 UT 29, ¶ 26, 94 P.3d 186, 191 (Utah 2004).

Although Petitioner was incorrect in using the plain meaning of “manifest injustice” to argue for plain error exception, it is unclear whether this concept still may apply to the other exception to the preservation rule, “exceptional circumstances,” discussed infra at 30. The confusion surrounding the term “manifest injustice” and the two preservation rule exceptions was expressly noted by the Court of Appeals in State v. Irwin, 924 P.2d 5, 10, n. 5 (Utah Ct. App. 1996), and perhaps complicated further by the discussion of the Supreme Court in State v. Nelson-Waggoner, 2004 UT 29, ¶23, 94 P.3d 186, 191 (Utah 2004). What is clear from the Court rulings is that the plain meaning of “manifest injustice” is not the same as “plain error” to invoke the exception to the preservation rule.

First, Petitioner failed to demonstrate a procedural due process error by the Board because she specifically received notice and opportunity to be heard at the administrative hearing held on August 22, 2005. See additional discussion, infra at 33. The Board granted Petitioner wide latitude at the hearing to present any issues where she believed she was wronged by the Board's decision denying her benefits. In fact, jurisdiction in this Court suggests that an administrative hearing was held below in which a Petitioner was granted notice and the opportunity to be heard. Utah Code Ann. §63-46b-16. As such, Petitioner cannot in any way demonstrate error by the AHO or the Board in failing to grant Petitioner procedural due process.

Second, Petitioner cannot demonstrate an error by the AHO for failing to grant her a benefit under U.C.A. §49-13-405 because the plain language of the statute denies Petitioner a benefit as the spouse of a retiree. See, discussion, infra at 39. Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405(2) states, "Upon the request of a deceased member's lawful spouse at the time of the member's death, the deceased member is considered to have retired under Option Three on the first day of the month following the month in which the member died . . .". (emphasis added). Utah Code Ann. §49-11-102(22)(a) defines "member" as, "a person, except a retiree, need only "argue" meritless claims for the first time on appeal because a Petitioner could strategically refuse to raise a potential issue just for the purpose of guaranteeing himself an overturned verdict on appeal. See argument concerning invited error infra at 23.

with contributions on deposit with a system . . .” (emphasis added).⁶ A “retiree” is defined as “an individual who has qualified for an allowance under this title.” Utah Code Ann. §49-11-102(34). Thus, Mr. Montierth, after filing his application and receiving a retirement allowance, was a retiree, not a member. Similarly, at the time of Mr. Montierth’s death, Petitioner was a retiree’s spouse, not a member’s spouse. The plain language of Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405(2) clearly states that this benefit is only intended for a member’s spouse, not a retiree’s spouse. Thus, Petitioner failed to demonstrate any error by the AHO or the Board for not granting Petitioner a benefit under U.C.A. § 49-13-405.

Third, Petitioner pointed to no specific error of law or fact on the part of the trier of fact, the AHO, in her section on waiver. See, Petitioner’s Brief at 19-22. The closest Petitioner comes to alleging a specific error of law on something actually decided by the AHO was her argument that, “In essence, the ALJ and the Board ignored the ‘hearsay’ evidence . . .” of Mr. Montierth’s intent to select a different retirement plan, and that this amounted to a “constitutional denial.”⁷ Petitioner’s Brief at 18. Of course, not only does Petitioner fail to point to any evidence that the AHO and/or the Board disregarded her hearsay testimony,⁸ but the Order's finding of fact No. 11 proves that the AHO and the Board specifically considered her hearsay statements when it expressly states, "Petitioner failed to provide any evidence outside of her testimony that Mr. Montierth mistakenly selected retirement Plan 1" Board's Order, HR 56. In addition, the AHO at the hearing specifically alluded to Petitioner's hearsay testimony in setting forth one of the reasons for his ruling by stating, " . . . based on the fact that the only evidence that is given [regarding her husband's intent in selecting a retirement plan] is the petitioner's statement of what she was told . . . I can't see how I can do anything except rule for the Board" TR, 50:9-10 (emphasis added). Far from not considering Petitioner's evidence, the AHO failed to find Petitioner's evidence persuasive or determinative.

In addition, Petitioner argues that her self-serving statements regarding Mr. Montierth's intent to select retirement plan three were not "hearsay" because they "were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted . . ." Petitioner's Brief at 17. However, Petitioner then contradicts this statement in the next page in arguing that these statements were not "contested" by the Board and are therefore "binding upon all parties." Petitioner's Brief at 18. Such as argument admits that Petitioner's hearsay statements were to prove the truth of the matter asserted.

⁸ In fact, Petitioner admits that her hearsay testimony was admitted by the AHO without objection. Petitioner's Brief at 18. It should not be a surprise to the Court that the Board did not object to Petitioner's hearsay testimony regarding her late husband's statements at the hearing since hearsay is admissible in administrative proceedings. See, Utah Code Ann. §63-46b-8(1)(c).

Petitioner's counsel argued just so at the hearing in stating, "We will substantiate [Mr. Montierth's intent to select a different retirement plan] by testimony from Ms. Montierth that will show she had knowledge of Mr. Montierth's intention and that he, his actions were consistent with him choosing plan three as opposed to plan one." HT 2:22-25. In fact, this was Petitioner's only argument at the hearing as to why she was due a benefit. Thus, Petitioner cannot claim her hearsay evidence should be used one way at the administrative hearing, then claim it was being used to demonstrate something different on appeal. In any event, the AHO impliedly ruled that the testimony was hearsay, and this was not error. See, TR 50:9-10, HR 58.

Although not an error of law, Petitioner also alleges that the AHO erred by not making a finding of fact regarding her husband's "actual belief" as to whether he intentionally deprived Petitioner of his retirement benefit.⁹ Petitioner's Brief, ⁹ As to the findings of fact, even if properly objected to at the hearing, Petitioner may only be granted relief on appeal from a finding of fact, or lack thereof, if, on the basis of the factual record, the court determines that she has been prejudiced by Board action that is not supported by substantial evidence when viewed in light of the whole record before the court. See, Utah Code Ann. § 63-46b-16(4)(g). The Appellate Court does not conduct a de novo credibility determination or reweigh the evidence. Questar Pipeline Co. v. Utah State Tax Com'n, 850 P.2d 1175, 1178 (Utah 1993). Nor will an agency's findings of fact be overturned if based on substantial evidence, even if another conclusion from the evidence is permissible. Hurley v. Board of Review of Indus. Com'n, 767 P.2d 524, 526-27 (Utah 1988). It is the province of the agency, not the Appellate Court, to resolve conflicting evidence, and where inconsistent inferences can be drawn from the same evidence, it is for the agency to draw the inference. Albertons Inc. v. Department of Employment Security, 854 P.2d 570, 575 (Utah App. 1993).

Here, the Petitioner asks this Court to create a finding of fact without any suggestion about what such a finding may look like. The extension of this at 17. But Petitioner contradicts herself on the following page in implying the Board erred in making finding of fact No.11 stating, “Petitioner failed to provide any evidence outside of her testimony that Mr. Montierth mistakenly selected retirement Plan 1 and meant to select another retirement plan on his Application.” Petitioner’s Brief, at 18. Because of Petitioner’s contradictory statements, the Board is then left to attempt to divine Petitioner’s actual objection or claimed error since on the one hand Petitioner claims the Board failed to make a specific finding of fact of intent, and on the other hand, she claims the Board’s finding of fact on intent was error. In any event, the Board correctly decided all the relevant issues raised by Petitioner and this was not error.

Because Petitioner failed to demonstrate any actual error of law or fact by the AHO, she cannot meet even the first prong of the plain error exception.

2. IN THE ALTERNATIVE, ANY ERROR BY THE AHO AND THE BOARD WAS INVITED ERROR.

Even if Petitioner is determined to have made some valid claim of an error of law or fact by the AHO, such an alleged error was “invited error.” Recently, the Utah Supreme Court, after discussing the elements of the “plain error” exception, stated, assertion would put the appellate court in the place of the AHO to weigh the testimony and make findings without being present. Thus, Petitioner’s implication that the Board failed in any way in making a finding of fact is clearly erroneous.

But under the doctrine of invited error, we have declined to engage in even plain error review when “counsel either by statement or act, affirmatively represented to the [trial] court that he or she had no objection to the [proceedings].” State v. Hamilton, 2003 UT 22, ¶ 54, 70 P.3d 111; accord Pinder, 2005 UT 15, ¶ 62, 114 P.3d 551; State v. Geukgeuzian, 2004 UT 16, ¶ 9, 86 P.3d 742.

Our invited error doctrine arises from the principle that ‘a party cannot take advantage of an error committed at trial when that party led the trial court into committing the error.’ Geukgeuzian, 2004 UT 16, ¶ 9, 86 P.3d 742 (quoting, State v. Anderson, 929 P.2d 1107, 1109 (Utah 1996)); accord Pinder, 2005 UT 15, ¶ 62, 114 P.3d 551; Hamilton, 2003 UT 22, ¶ 54, 70 P.3d 111. By precluding appellate review, the doctrine furthers this principle by “discourag[ing] parties from intentionally misleading the trial court so as to preserve a hidden ground for reversal on appeal.” Geukgeuzian, 2004 UT 16, ¶ 12, 86 P.3d 742 (internal quotation marks omitted).

State v. Winfield, 2006 UT 4, ¶¶ 14-15, 2006 WL 73758 (Utah 2006).

Here, Petitioner cannot claim due process, statutory interpretation, or that the AHO erred in making, or failing to make, a finding of fact or a conclusion of law to invoke the plain error rule without running afoul of the “invited error” doctrine.

Following his ruling at the hearing, the AHO requested counsel for the Board prepare an Order consistent with his ruling. See, HT 50:13. Counsel for the Board drafted the Order and, with a cover letter, sent it to Petitioner’s counsel for approval as to form. See, HR 54. Petitioner’s attorney, Rocky Crofts, of the law firm of Smith Knowles, P.C., who represented Petitioner at the hearing, approved the Order as to form by signing the Order without changes, and returned it to the Board for approval. See, HR. 59. By failing to file objections to the proposed order and signing the order as to form, Petitioner affirmatively waived any issues surrounding alleged errors by the AHO on appeal. If Petitioner truly believed that error was committed under the due process clause, statutory interpretation, or by the AHO in making or failing to make a finding of fact or a conclusion of law, she had ample opportunity to object to the Order before approving it as to form, but failed to do so. As such, Petitioner's claim of an exception to the preservation rule for plain error fails because any alleged error was affirmatively invited by Petitioner.

3. PETITIONER'S ALLEGATIONS OF ERROR ARE NOT PLAIN.

Petitioner cannot meet the plain error exception to the preservation rule because any error by the AHO was not plain. The second prong of the plain error exception to the preservation rule is that the alleged error must be "plain" or "obvious" to the fact finder, the AHO. State v. Archambeau, 820 P.2d 920, 922 (Utah Ct. App. 1991). The Court has stated regarding this element, "from our examination of the record, we must be able to say that it should have been obvious to a trial court that it was committing error." Id. Thus, in order to sustain a claim for procedural due process which was not raised below, Petitioner must show that the AHO or the Board should have recognized that they had violated Petitioner's due process rights in granting her an administrative hearing. Of course Petitioner never explains, and it certainly begs the question, how an AHO could find an "obvious" error of a failure of notice and opportunity to be heard in the midst of a formal administrative hearing. Indeed, one of the reasons for administrative hearings is to grant procedural due process. Without argument to preserve the issue, any claimed error of procedural due process would not be plain.

Similarly, a claim for benefits under Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405 to the spouse of a retiree would also not be plain absent argument. It seems axiomatic that in a civil case in which a party fails to state a cause of action or argue under a statute at a hearing/trial, that party cannot sustain a claim for what they wished they had claimed before the fact finder for the first time on appeal. If a Petitioner could prevail this way, it would effectively eviscerate any ability of a trial court or hearing officer to decide cases and controversies if the tribunal must decide not only the issues a Petitioner actually raises, but also the issues that a Petitioner might potentially raise. Although there are some legal issues which arise in trials/hearing so frequently as to be said to be “plain” to the fact finder, the Board is unaware of any other individual ever arguing, like Petitioner, for a continuing benefit under Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405 to the spouse of a retiree. Because of Petitioner’s novelty of an argument under this section, such an argument cannot be said to have been obvious to the AHO.

Finally, even if the Petitioner establishes error by the AHO in failing to “consider” Petitioner’s hearsay evidence, such an alleged error would not have been “obvious” to the AHO because even in administrative hearings, hearsay evidence cannot be the sole basis for a finding of fact. Utah Code Ann. §63-46b-10(3). Thus, no finding of fact could have been made based solely on the Petitioner’s hearsay testimony of Mr. Montierth’s intent in choosing a retirement plan. Furthermore, Utah retirement statutes specifically do not allow for the Board to look beyond the retirement application to determine a member's "intent" at the time of retirement. See, Utah Code Ann. §49-13-401. Thus, even if Petitioner demonstrates some error by the AHO to meet the first prong of the plain error test, she cannot claim that this error was "plain."

4. PETITIONER'S ALLEGATIONS OF ERROR ARE HARMLESS.

Finally, even if Petitioner can sustain a claim of error by the AHO without specificity and can overcome her invited error in failing to object to the Board's Order, the alleged error by the AHO was harmless to Petitioner. The Court has explained this third element of the plain error exception as "absent the error, there is a reasonable likelihood of a more favorable outcome for the appellant, or phrased differently, our confidence in the verdict is undermined." State v. Dunn, 850 P.2d 1201, 1208-09 (Utah 1993).

First, Petitioner's allegation that the AHO or the Board violated her due process guarantees is not harmful error because the remedy for a failure of procedural due process is to grant a hearing complying with procedural due process. Petitioner already obtained a formal administrative hearing before the AHO. Thus, the Board committed no harmful error in granting Petitioner a formal administrative hearing.

Second, Petitioner's claim that the AHO failed to consider her hearsay evidence, or that her testimony of Mr. Montierth's intent was not hearsay was harmless error because no one, not even Mr. Montierth could have changed Mr.

Montierth's retirement selection two years after his retirement date. Utah Code Ann. § 49-11-607(1) mandates, "After the retirement date, which shall be set by a member in the member's application for retirement, no alteration, addition, or cancellation of a benefit may be made" ¹⁰ (emphasis added). Thus, hearsay or

¹⁰ Section 49-11-607(1) provides for three exceptions, but none of the stated exceptions apply to Petitioner's situation. Furthermore, Petitioner did not argue that any of the exceptions applied either before the AHO or in her Brief to this Court, and as such is precluded from now raising argument under these sections. Section 49-11-607 states in full:

(1) After the retirement date, which shall be set by a member in the member's application for retirement, no alteration, addition, or cancellation of a benefit may be made except as provided in Subsections (2), (3), and (4) or other law.

(2) (a) Errors in the records or in the calculations of the office which result in an incorrect benefit to any member, retiree, participant, covered individual, alternate payee, or beneficiary shall be corrected by the office if the correction results in a modification of the benefit amount of $1 or more.

(b) Future payments shall be made to any member, retiree, participant, covered individual, alternate payee, or beneficiary to:

- (i) pay the benefit to which the member or beneficiary was entitled; or
- (ii) recover any overpayment.

(3) (a) Errors in the records or calculation of a participating employer which result in an incorrect benefit to a member, retiree, participant, covered individual, alternate payee, or beneficiary shall be corrected by the participating employer.

(b) If insufficient employer contributions have been received by the office, the participating employer shall pay any delinquent employer contributions, plus interest under Section 49-11-503, required by the office to maintain the system, plan, or program affected on an actuarially sound basis.

(c) If excess contributions have been received by the office, the contributions shall be refunded to the participating employer or member which paid the contributions.

(4) If a dispute exists between a participating employer and a member at the time of the member's retirement which will affect the member's benefit calculation, and notice of the dispute is given to the office prior to the calculation of a member's benefit, the benefit may be paid based on the member's retirement date and the records available and then recalculated upon settlement of the dispute.

no hearsay, under law, even the retiree could not change a benefit option after his retirement date, let alone the retiree's spouse. In fact, Petitioner admits that the alleged error by the AHO will not likely allow for a more favorable outcome for her. She stated, "With respect to the evidentiary record, the Utah State Retirement Board failed to decide a critical issue, or silently assumed it adversely to Appellant" Petitioner's Brief at 17 (emphasis added). This admission that the AHO would not find in her favor even if the AHO had decided her stated issue, undercuts her claim of plain "harmful" error. As a result, Petitioner's alleged error of failing to consider hearsay evidence, although belied by the plain language of the order,¹¹ is not harmful error.

Hence, because Petitioner cannot prove harmful error nor challenge a silent finding of fact, her arguments not preserved below are precluded under the general preservation rule. Petitioner cannot invoke the plain error exception to the preservation rule because she cannot meet even one element of the exception for any of her arguments, let alone all three which are required to invoke the exception.

B. PETITIONER’S ISSUES RAISED ON APPEAL ARE NOT “EXCEPTIONAL CIRCUMSTANCES” IN WHICH TO INVOKE THIS EXCEPTION TO THE PRESERVATION RULE.

Similar to the plain error analysis, Petitioner failed to demonstrate any “exceptional circumstances” to invoke an exception to the general rule that an issue is waived on appeal if not preserved before the trier of fact. Although the Court has characterized this exception as “ill-defined”, State v. Dunn, 850 P.2d 1201, 1209, n.3 (Utah 1993), the Court of Appeals, in State v. Irwin, attempted to glean from the common law the principles on which the “exceptional circumstances” exception applies, concluding, “With the possible exception of an aberration or two, ‘exceptional circumstances’ is a concept that is used sparingly, properly reserved for truly exceptional situations, for cases . . . involving ‘rare procedural anomalies.’” Irwin, 924 P.2d 5, 11 (Utah Ct. App. 1996), quoting, State v. Dunn, 850 P.2d 1201, 1209, n.3 (Utah 1993)(finding exceptional circumstances exception is “ill-defined, and applies primarily to rare procedural anomalies . . .”); See also, State v. Nelson-Waggoner, 2004 UT 29, ¶ 23, 94 P.3d 186, 191 (Utah 2004)(holding, identically to Irwin, that exceptional circumstances only applies “sparingly” and in the “most unusual circumstances”); State v. McCloud, 2005 UT 466, ¶ 14, 126 P.3d 775, 778-79 (Utah Ct. App. 2005).

Petitioner also failed to point to any unusual circumstance which rises to the level of “extraordinary importance” or “widespread interest” to invoke the exceptional circumstances exception. Irwin, 924 P.3d at 11. “. . . [n]ot in every case with some peculiar twist will appellate courts invoke the ‘exceptional circumstances’ label and reach an issue otherwise impervious to appellate review.” Id., at 8. Even constitutional questions such as due process have not been deemed of “extraordinary importance” or “widespread interest” to invoke the exception. See e.g., State v. Archambeau, 820 P.2d 920, 925 (Utah 1991)(“We conclude that a defendant may not assert a constitutional issue for the first time on appeal unless he can demonstrate ‘plain error’ or ‘exceptional circumstances.’”); Pratt v. City Council of City of Riverton, 639 P.2d 172, 173-74 (Utah 1981)(holding that the general preservation rule “applies equally to constitutional issues”); State v. Buford, 820 P.2d 1381, 1384 (Utah App. 1991) (“This court has previously declined to consider Utah constitutional arguments because ‘[n]ominally alluding to such different constitutional guarantees without any analysis before the trial court does not sufficiently raise the issue to permit consideration by this court on appeal.’” quoting, State v. Johnson, 771 P.2d 326, 327 (Utah App.1989)).

Here, Petitioner cannot point to any exceptional circumstance or “rare procedural anomaly” to invoke this exception.¹² Changes in law or in settled interpretation of law following a hearing/trial are the types of “rare procedural anomalies” which the Court accepts as exceptional circumstances under this rule. See, e.g. State v. Haston, 846 P.2d 1276 (Utah 1993)(overturning conviction for crime not recognized in Utah following recent Supreme Court decision); State v. Lopez, 873 P.2d 1127 (Utah 1994)(allowing defendant to make argument before the Supreme Court not preserved before trial court, but was basis of decision by Court of Appeals); State v. McCloud, 2005 UT 466, ¶ 14, 126 P.3d 775, 778-79 (Utah Ct. App. 2005)(finding that change in law colored failure to raise issue at trial). This list of cases is illustrative to show that the most common procedural irregularity recognized as an exceptional circumstance is "where a change in law or the settled interpretation of law colored the failure to have raised an issue at trial." Irwin, 924 P.2d at 10. Petitioner failed to point to any recent change in the law in this case.

Additionally, the court uses this rule in an attempt to allow for fairness when there is some legitimate reason why a party failed to raise an issue before the AHO/trial court. In her Brief, Petitioner failed to, and indeed, cannot point to, any reason, either rare or common, either procedural or substantive, why she failed to preserve any constitutional procedural due process, statutory interpretation of Utah Code Ann. §49-13-403, or AHO error issues before the AHO. Because she simply cannot prove any rare procedural anomaly to invoke the exceptional circumstances exception, she is precluded from arguing issues not raised before the AHO for the first time on appeal.

II. IN THE ALTERNATIVE, THE BOARD GRANTED PETITIONER CONSTITUTIONAL PROCEDURAL DUE PROCESS BY GRANTING HER A FULL AND FAIR HEARING.

Even if the Court allows Petitioner to raise due process¹³ issues she failed to raise before the AHO, the Board afforded Petitioner complete procedural due process by allowing her to contest the denial of continuing retirement benefits at a hearing.¹⁴ Strangely, Petitioner alleges the Board failed to grant her notice and opportunity to be heard following a formal administrative hearing in which Petitioner admits she received notice, obtained legal counsel, called witnesses, presented evidence, and cross-examined Board witnesses. See, HR 5, HT 3:1-3, 4:2-3, 16:2-4, 40-49. In fact, no allegation has been made, and indeed no credible allegation can be made, that the Board did not follow its constitutional formal administrative proceedings to the letter in denying Petitioner's claim.

Even Petitioner's claim that she was denied a chance to be heard at the time of her husband's retirement election makes no cognitive sense as a procedural due process claim. Such a claim would only arise if the Board had argued that ¹³ Utah courts have interpreted the federal due process guarantees identically to the state due process guarantees. "Because 'Utah's constitutional guarantee of due process is substantially the same as the due process guarantees contained in the Fifth and Fourteenth amendments to the United States Constitution,' In re Worthen, 926 P.2d 853, 876 (Utah 1996), we need not undertake separate federal and state analysis." Sierra Club v. Utah Solid and Hazardous Waste Control Bd., 964 P.2d 335, 346, n. 7 (Utah Ct. App. 1998).

¹⁴ Petitioner made no explicit argument regarding a violation of substantive due process. Although not expressly enumerated, her argument that she was denied "notice and the opportunity to be heard" are procedural due process claims. Petitioner's Brief at 11-14. The Board refuses to speculate on any substantive due process claims which Petitioner believes she may have but failed to raise in her Brief.

Petitioner could not present issues of Mr. Montierth's intent in selecting a retirement plan at a hearing. In this case, the Board granted Petitioner wide latitude to present any and all issues regarding Mr. Montierth's intent to make a selection of a retirement plan at the hearing. Yet, even if she was denied a procedural due process right, a dubious claim at best, Petitioner's remedy would be to receive a hearing on the merits. One must wonder what kind of harm Petitioner believes that she has suffered by not being able to bring a claim at the time her husband made his retirement plan election since she was able to bring her claim to challenge her husband's retirement plan election after her husband died.

By doing so Petitioner actually received more benefits by waiting until after her husband died to contest her husband's retirement plan selection, since her husband's election paid a higher benefit than the plan she is requesting.

Hence, all the evidence points to the fact that Petitioner received all the process she was due through the administrative hearing process in participating in a hearing before the AHO. As such, this Court should deny Petitioner's procedural due process claim of a lack of notice and opportunity to be heard.

III. EVEN IF PETITIONER CAN SURVIVE HER FAILURE TO RAISE DUE PROCESS ISSUES BEFORE THE AHO, AND EVEN IF THIS COURT FINDS SOME UNCLAIMED FAILURE BY THE BOARD TO GRANT HER PROCEDURAL DUE PROCESS, PETITIONER MAINTAINS NO INDIVIDUAL PROPERTY INTEREST IN HER LATE HUSBAND'S RETIREMENT BENEFIT TO INVOKE THE DUE PROCESS CLAUSE.

Neither common law, nor the unambiguous retirement statutes in Utah Code Ann. Title 49, grant Petitioner any individual property right or an individual “vested right” to a retirement benefit as the spouse of a retiree. As such, Petitioner cannot sustain a due process claim for deprivation of property because she has not been deprived of any property interest.

The Court has stated, “Under Utah law, public pension and retirement systems give rise to vested contractual rights.” Hom v. Utah Dep’t of Public Safety, 962 P.2d 95 (Utah Ct App 1998). A member of the retirement systems vests in his/her contractual rights when he meets all the conditions precedent to receive retirement benefits. See, Utah Public Employees Ass’n. v. State, 2006 UT 9, ¶29 (Utah Ct. App. 2006)(citing, Hom, 962 P.2d at 100), See, also, Driggs v. Utah State Teachers Retirement Bd., 142 P.2d 657 (Utah 1943). These vested contractual rights constitute a property interest. Conversely, those without vested contractual rights do not have a property interest in a retirement benefit.

Petitioner’s reliance on Woodward v. Woodward, 656 P.2d 431 (Utah 1982) and other divorce or equitable distribution of marital property cases is misplaced to show that Petitioner has an individual property interest in her late husband’s retirement benefit. Although the Court has recognized that non-vested retirement benefits of an employee spouse may be included in a marital estate and divided equitably by the Court in a divorce action, the Court has consistently stopped short of calling such expectancy interests “property.” See, Woodward, 656 P.2d 431. Even more specifically, the Court has never held that such expectancy interests are individual “property” held by the non-employee spouse.

Instead, the Court has repeatedly declared that retirement rights accrued during a marriage are part of the marital estate, and that a non-employee spouse in a divorce action may receive an equitable portion of retirement rights, not property, when those rights are being equitably divided. See, Id. at 432-433, “[t]he essential criterion is whether a right to the benefit or asset has accrued in whole or in part during the marriage. To the extent that the right as so accrued it is subject to equitable distribution.”(emphasis added.). Id., See, also, Chambers v. Chambers, 840 P.2d 841, 844 (Utah Ct. App. 1992). In fact, the Court does not require a present value distribution of retirement benefits at the time of divorce, as some other states require. In Utah, the Court mandates merely that retirement rights accrued during the marriage, like future business earnings which can also be split upon divorce, be apportioned to both divorcing parties equally. Without a court’s division of such rights upon a divorce, no separate individual property right exists outside of the employee’s right to a benefit. The legislature recognized this rule in Utah Code Ann. §49-11-612(3)(a) which states, “The office shall provide for the division of an allowance, defined contribution account, continuing monthly death benefit, or refund of member contributions upon termination to former spouses and family members under an order of a court of competent jurisdiction with respect to domestic relations matters on file with the office.” (emphasis added). Thus, only if the Court specifically grants an equitable distribution of retirement rights pursuant to a divorce or similar proceeding and the employee becomes vested in those contractual rights, does a spouse have a separate, individual right to retirement benefits outside the employee. Absent the Court splitting the retirement benefit and vesting by the employee, no separate, individual retirement right is created with a spouse.

Here, because the Montierths did not divorce, and no equitable division of retirement rights took place pursuant to a valid DRO, Petitioner maintains no individual property interest in her late husband's retirement benefit.

As Petitioner admitted in her Brief, in order to prevail on a claim for due process, she must prove some deprivation of a property interest. Petitioner's Brief, at 7-8.

The retirement statutes are unambiguous concerning the conditions precedent to receive a retirement benefit, or in other words, to vest in a property interest. For the Public Employees' Noncontributory System, Utah Code Ann. §49-13-401¹⁵ states,

(1) A member is qualified to receive an allowance from this system when:

(a) the member ceases actual work for a participating employer in this system before the member's retirement date and provides evidence of the termination;

(b) the member has submitted to the office a notarized retirement application form that states the member's proposed retirement date; and

(c) one of the following conditions is met as of the member's retirement date:

(i) the member has accrued at least four years of service credit and has attained an age of 65 years;

(ii) the member has accrued at least ten years of service credit and has attained an age of 62 years;

(iii) the member has accrued at least 20 years of service credit and has attained an age of 60 years;

(iv) the member has accrued at least 30 years of service credit; or

(v) the member has accrued at least 25 years of service credit, in which case the member shall be subject to the reduction under Subsection 49-13-402(2)(b).

(2) (a) The member's retirement date shall be the 1st or the 16th day of the month, as selected by the member, but the retirement date must be on or after the date of termination.

(b) The retirement date may not be more than 90 days before or after the date the application is received by the office.

(emphasis added).

From this section, it is clear that only a “member” can obtain individual vested contractual rights, and thus an individual property interest in a retirement benefit.

In addition, only a “member” can submit a retirement application, and only a member can select a retirement date. “Member” is defined in Utah Code Ann.

§49-11-102(23)(a) as “a person, except a retiree, with contributions on deposit with a system. . . .”¹⁶ It is undisputed that Petitioner did not have contributions on deposit with the Public Employees’ Noncontributory Retirement System. Because

Petitioner is not a “member,” as defined, she cannot meet the conditions precedent to obtain a vested right, and thus maintains no individual property interest in her husband’s retirement benefit. At best, prior to Mr. Montierth’s retirement, Petitioner was a potential future beneficiary of Mr. Montierth. Such a speculative potential contract right is not a property interest. See, Utah Public Employees Ass’n. v. State, 2006 UT 9 (Utah Ct. App. 2006). After Mr. Montierth’s retirement and selection of a retirement plan with no continuing benefit to his spouse, Petitioner had no relationship with the retirement office at all. Thus, Petitioner cannot sustain any claim of due process against the Board for deprivation of property because at no point in time did Petitioner have an individual property interest in her late husband’s retirement benefit.

IV. IN THE ALTERNATIVE, EVEN IF PETITIONER PROPERLY PRESERVED THE ISSUE FOR APPEAL, THE PLAIN LANGUAGE OF UTAH CODE ANN. §49-13-405(2) FAILS TO GRANT PETITIONER ANY RETIREMENT BENEFIT AS THE SPOUSE OF A RETIREE.

For the first time on appeal, Petitioner wrongly argues that the Board failed to follow the “spirit and letter [sic] of” Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405(2). Because Petitioner failed to raise this argument before the AHO, she is precluded from bringing this issue before this Court. See, discussion supra at 14. However, even if the Court chooses to review this issue, it would find that the Board followed the plain language of Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405(2) which explicitly does not apply to the spouse of a “retiree.”

Utah courts have consistently held that “when faced with a question of statutory construction, we look first to the plain language of the statute.” CIG Exploration, Inv. v. Utah State Tax Com’n, 897 P.2d 1214, 1216 (Utah 1995). Furthermore, “The court's principal duty in interpreting statutes is to determine legislative intent, and the best evidence of legislative intent is the plain language of the statute.” Sullivan v. Scoular Grain Co. of Utah, 853 P.2d 877, 879 (Utah 1993); (citing Jensen v. Intermountain Health Care, Inc., 679 P.2d 903, 906 (Utah 1984)). A court will only seek guidance from legislative history or policy considerations when there is an ambiguity in the statute’s plain language. See, CIG, 897 P.2d 1214 at 1216. “The fact that the parties offer differing constructions of the statute, in and of itself, does not mean that the statute is ‘ambiguous.’ ‘Ambiguous’ means capable of ‘two or more plausible meanings.’” Derbidge v. Mutual Protective Ins. Co., 963 P.2d 788, 791 (Utah Ct. App. 1998) (citations omitted).

The policy behind this statute is also plain. Those members with long-term service to the public who die not having retired and selected a retirement plan option, are allowed a continuing benefit to their spouse. Meanwhile, those retirees who had the option at retirement of selecting a continuing benefit to their spouse, are not given a second option of a continuing benefit to their spouse at death. In fact, adopting Petitioner’s faulty interpretation of Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405 would frustrate the actuarial soundness of offering different retirement options, because every member would select a non-continuing benefit plan at the time of retirement and then allow their spouse to convert to a continuing benefit, if necessary, upon their death.

Finally, one wonders why Petitioner brought this argument after conceding that this statute is designed “only for employees who die [sic] before they actually retired.” Petitioner’s Brief at 15. In addition, Petitioner’s assertion that the Board violated “the spirit” of Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405, is an implied, if not a specific, admission that the plain language of the statute fails to grant Petitioner a benefit. Petitioner’s Brief at 14. Thus, Petitioner can make no legitimate argument that Petitioner should be granted a benefit under the plain language of Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405 because Petitioner’s husband elected to retire and was thus a retiree and not a member.

V. EVEN IF NOT BARRED BY THE PRESERVATION RULE, THE AHO CORRECTLY CONSIDERED PETITIONER’S EVIDENCE, INCLUDING HEARSAY EVIDENCE, IN DETERMINING UNDER TITLE 49 THAT PETITIONER FAILED TO QUALIFY FOR ANY CONTINUING RETIREMENT BENEFIT FROM HER LATE HUSBAND’S PREVIOUS EMPLOYMENT.

Even if not barred by the preservation rule or the invited error doctrine discussed supra at 17 & 24, the AHO did not err in admitting Petitioner’s hearsay evidence or ruling that Petitioner failed to prove an entitlement to a continuing retirement benefit under Title 49. Petitioner failed to point to any proof that the AHO did not consider her evidence presented or that the AHO failed to decide any legitimate issues raised at the hearing.

First, Petitioner's allegation that the AHO failed to consider her self-serving hearsay testimony must fail because of a complete lack of evidence. The Order's finding of fact No. 11 shows that the AHO and the Board specifically admitted and considered Petitioner's hearsay statements when it states, "Petitioner failed to provide any evidence outside of her testimony that Mr. Montierth mistakenly selected retirement Plan 1" Board's Order, HR 56 (emphasis added). In addition, the AHO specifically alluded to Petitioner's hearsay testimony in setting forth one of the reasons for his ruling by stating, ". . . based on the fact that the only evidence that is given [regarding her husband's intent in selecting a retirement plan] is the petitioner's statement of what she was told . . . I can't see how I can do anything except rule for the Board" TR, 50:9-10. Petitioner points to nothing to show that the AHO or the Board failed to admit or consider her self-serving hearsay statements. Thus, no credible argument can be made that the AHO failed to consider Petitioner's hearsay testimony based on the evidence.

Second, the Board was correct in impliedly ruling Petitioner's testimony regarding her husband's statements to her at the time of retirement were hearsay. Either these statements were to prove the truth of the matter asserted, or Petitioner has absolutely no evidence of any intent that Mr. Montierth wanted to select a different retirement option than option one. Even Petitioner's counsel at the hearing stated, "We will substantiate [Mr. Montierth's intent to select a different retirement plan] by testimony from Ms. Montierth that will show she had knowledge of Mr. Montierth's intention and that he, his actions were consistent with him choosing plan three as opposed to plan one." HT 2:22-25. In fact, this was Petitioner's only argument at the hearing. As a policy matter, a Petitioner cannot claim her evidence should be used one way at the administrative hearing, then claim it was being used a different way on appeal. Thus, no credible argument can be made that these statements were not being used to prove the truth of the matter asserted.

Third, the AHO and the Board decided all relevant issues raised by Petitioner. Petitioner wrongly claims that the Board was required to make a finding of fact regarding Mr. Montierth's intent in selecting a retirement plan. Petitioner may only be granted relief from an appeal of a finding of fact, or lack thereof, if, on the basis of the factual record, the court determines that she has been prejudiced by Board action that is not supported by substantial evidence when viewed in light of the whole record before the court. U.C.A. § 63-46b-16(4)(g). The Appellate Court does not conduct a de novo credibility determination or reweigh the evidence. Questar Pipeline Co. v. State Tax Comm'n, 850 P.2d 1175, 1178 (Utah 1993). Nor will an agency's findings of fact be overturned if based on substantial evidence, even if another conclusion from the evidence is permissible. Hurley v. Board of Review of Industrial Comm'n, 767 P.2d 524, 526-27 (Utah 1988). It is the province of the agency, not the Appellate Court, to resolve conflicting evidence, and where inconsistent inferences can be drawn from the same evidence, it is for the agency to draw the inference. Albertons Inc. v.

Department of Employment Security, 854 P.2d 570, 575 (Utah App. 1993).

Petitioner cannot meet her high burden in challenging the Board's findings of fact because she cannot show that "substantial evidence" in light of the entire record required such a separate finding.

The Board's findings of fact regarding Petitioner's intent in selecting a retirement plan benefit are clear:

4. On August 15, 2002, Mr. Montierth filed an Application for Service Retirement ("Application") with the Office for a July 16, 2002, retirement date.
5. On his Application, [Mr. Montierth] selected retirement, "Plan 1." . . .
11. Petitioner failed to provide any evidence outside of her testimony that Mr. Montierth mistakenly selected retirement Plan 1"

Board's Order, HR 56 (emphasis added).

In these findings, the Board impliedly determined: 1) the Application for retirement benefits shows Mr. Montierth's intent to select a plan one retirement benefit, and 2) Petitioner's only evidence to show a different intent was her self-serving hearsay testimony which cannot be the sole basis for a finding of fact. Utah Code Ann. §63-46b-10(3). Given these findings, the Board correctly ruled that no finding of fact could be made that Mr. Montierth intended to select any retirement plan other than plan one.

In the alternative, even if Petitioner had proven Mr. Montierth's intent to select a different retirement plan at the time of his retirement, she was not prejudiced by the Board's decision because even a retiree cannot change his retirement plan selection after his retirement date. Utah Code Ann. §49-11-607(1) states, “After the retirement date, which shall be set by a member in the member’s application for retirement, no alteration, addition, or cancellation of a benefit may be made”¹⁷ Thus, even if Mr. Montierth had been alive to testify that he wanted to change his retirement plan, he could not have done so under the plain language of this section. As such, Petitioner was not harmed by any alleged failure by the Board in making, or failing to make, a finding of fact on Mr. Montierth’s intent to select a different retirement plan.

In sum, the AHO specifically admitted Petitioner’s hearsay testimony regarding Petitioner’s statements, made findings of fact concerning Mr. Montierth’s intent, and correctly applied the hearsay rule. In addition, even such a failure by the AHO did not prejudice Petitioner because she cannot change a retirement plan election after the retirement date. Therefore, Petitioner’s allegation that the Board failed to “consider” her hearsay testimony and make a requisite finding of fact must be denied.

VI. MR. MONTIERTH’S SIGNED AND NOTARIZED RETIREMENT APPLICATION WAS VALID AND COMPLETE PURSUANT TO UTAH CODE ANN. § 49-13-402.

The only issue Petitioner raised before the AHO that is not precluded before this Court is whether Mr. Montierth’s retirement application was legally complete. Utah Code Ann. §49-13-401 states, “A member is qualified to receive an allowance from this system when: . . . the member has submitted to the office a notarized retirement application form that states the member's proposed retirement date; . . .” The plain language of the statute dictates that in order to be accepted to effectuate benefits, a retirement application must contain: 1) a selection of a retirement date, and 2) a notarized signature of the member. Utah Code Ann. §49-13-402. It is undisputed that Mr. Montierth's retirement application contained both a selection of a retirement date and a notarized signature of Mr. Montierth. Thus, Mr. Montierth's retirement application was both valid and binding.¹⁸

¹⁷ This section is quoted in its entirety supra at 8-9.

Once the retirement application is complete, the retirement office cannot second guess an applicant's retirement choices. As the Petitioner so aptly explained, as a fiduciary, the retirement office maintains a duty to carry out a member's expressly stated intent in his/her application. This is what Retirement Director Judy Lund explained in her testimony when she stated, “. . . once we [Office] have the application and if everything's valid we presume the member has selected the plan he or she wishes . . .” HT 32:22-24. Indeed, one wonders how the retirement office could do any differently.

¹⁸ Petitioner's claim of lack of a completed retirement application by Mr. Montierth is dubious for another reason - standing. Mr. Montierth owns any claim that he failed to complete the retirement application in some way. Petitioner, as an individual, cannot step into his shoes and challenge the validity of this application. Even if she was deemed the executor of his estate, which is not in the record, any claim must be made in the name of the estate, not Petitioner's own name. Thus, while a claim by Petitioner might be made as a Third Party beneficiary, she failed to do so both before the AHO and this Court, and cannot make such a claim in a Reply Brief. See, Murphy v. State Retirement Bd., 2004 UT App. 109, (Utah Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 94 P.3d 929 (July 19, 2004).

Conversely, Petitioner mistakenly complains in her argument, that because Mr. Montierth failed to sign the back of the retirement application, it is “null and void.” Petitioner’s Brief at 19. Once again, Petitioner provides not one scintilla of support for this erroneous proposition, and it is not supported by the evidence. Further, Petitioner incorrectly complains that this lack of signature on the back of the application proves Mr. Montierth failed to understand his retirement options. Reviewing the evidence suggests otherwise.

First, Mr. Montierth, prior to submitting his retirement application, spoke with the retirement office on the telephone and received three written estimates of various retirement options available to him. See, HT 36:5-6, HR 50-53. After receipt of these estimates, Mr. Montierth then completed a purchase of future service credit in order to be eligible to retire attesting that he not only knew of his retirement options, he selected one involving additional paperwork. Second, and perhaps most telling of Mr. Montierth’s knowledge of his retirement plans, Mr. Montierth specifically attested by signing his application, “I understand the limitations as described on the reverse side of this form.” HR 47.

Third, not once after receiving his retirement benefits did Mr. Montierth ever complain to anyone, not even his wife, that he had selected a retirement plan that did not comply with his express intent. Thus, Petitioner simply cannot credibly maintain that Mr. Montierth failed to understand the retirement plans given the evidence.

Hence, because Mr. Montierth's signed retirement application complied with the plain statutory requirements of Utah Code Ann. §49-13-402, and because the evidence shows Mr. Montierth understood his retirement options, Mr. Montierth's application was valid and binding under the plain language of the statute.

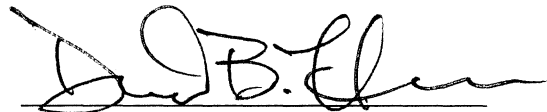

CONCLUSION

The Board hereby asks this Court to reject Petitioner's appeal in its entirety. Petitioner failed to raise due process, statutory construction, and evidentiary issues before the AHO, thereby precluding her from raising them for the first time on appeal. However, if Petitioner can survive her failure to raise these arguments and issues, the Board granted Petitioner constitutional procedural due process by granting her a hearing. In the alternative, Petitioner maintains no individual property interest in her late husband's retirement benefit to invoke the due process clause.

Additionally, the plain language of Utah Code Ann. §49-13-405(2) fails to grant Petitioner any retirement benefit as the spouse of a retiree. Similarly, the AHO correctly considered Petitioner's evidence, including hearsay evidence, in determining under Title 49 that Petitioner failed to qualify for any continuing retirement benefit from her late husband's previous employment. Finally, Mr.

Montierth's signed and notarized retirement application was valid and complete pursuant to Utah Code Ann. §49-13-402. Thus, Petitioner presented no valid argument why she should prevail on appeal, and her request for continuing retirement benefits must be denied.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW AND ORDER

File #: 05-06R

Hearing Officer: Barker

A hearing was held on August 22, 2005, before the Adjudicative Hearing Officer on Petitioner's Request for Board Action. Petitioner was represented by Rocky D. Crofts. The Utah State Retirement Board ("Board") was represented by David B. Hansen. Based upon the evidence in this matter and the legal memoranda submitted, the Adjudicative Hearing Officer rendered a decision in favor of the Board. The Adjudicative Hearing Officer now makes the following Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Order.

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Wesley V. Montierth ("Mr. Montierth) was a member of the Public Employees Noncontributory Retirement System ("PERS").

2. PERS is administered by the Utah State Retirement Office (“Office”).
3. Prior to his retirement, Mr. Montierth requested and received three Retirement Benefit Estimates (“Estimates”).
4. On August 16, 2002, Mr. Montierth filed an Application for Service Retirement (“Application”) with the Office for a July 16, 2002, retirement date.
5. On his Application, Petitioner selected retirement “Plan 1.”
6. On August 16, 2002, Mr. Montierth had his signature on his completed Application notarized by Ms. Ann Hancock Young, a retirement counselor.
7. Mr. Montierth’s signed Application states in part:

In accordance with the statutes governing the Utah Retirement Systems, I make application for retirement benefits. I understand the limitations as described on the reverse side of this form. I hereby certify that the information provided on this form and any of the attached forms is true correct, and complete to the best of my knowledge.

8. For 27 months, Mr. Montierth and Kathy Montierth (“Petitioner”) received and benefited from a Plan 1 retirement benefit, which provided substantially more in retirement benefits than any other retirement plan benefit.
9. Mr. Montierth passed away on October 20, 2004.
10. Petitioner is the surviving spouse of Mr. Montierth.
11. Petitioner failed to provide any evidence outside of her testimony that Mr. Montierth mistakenly selected retirement Plan 1 and meant to select another retirement plan on his Application.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Utah Code Ann. § 49-11-613(4) provides that Petitioner bears the burden of proof in this matter.
2. Utah Code Ann. § 49-11-607(1), states, "After the retirement date, which shall be set by a member in the member's application for retirement, no alteration, addition, or cancellation of a benefit may be made except as provided in Subsections (2), (3), and (4) or other law."
3. Petitioner failed to provide documentation or testimony which would allow her to change Mr. Montierth's retirement plan after his retirement date.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Petitioner's request to change Mr. Monthierth's retirement plan is hereby denied.

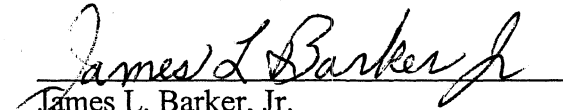

BOARD RECONSIDERATION

Within ten (10) days of a Board order, any party may file a written request for reconsideration stating the specific grounds upon which relief is requested as set forth in Utah Code Ann. §49-11-613. Petition for Emergency Relief

WILKINS, Associate Chief Justice:

¶1 In its 2005 session, the Utah Legislature passed House Bill 213 (H.B. 213), known as the "Unused Sick Leave at Retirement Amendments." Although the Legislature set the bill's effective date as January 1, 2006, we, at the request of Petitioners, postponed the effective date of the amendments to allow review of the constitutional issues presented in this case. The Utah Public Employees Association (UPEA) and Roes 1 through 5 have asked us, on expedited review, to consider whether the provisions of H.B. 213 result in an unconstitutional taking of state employees' vested property rights. We conclude that they do not.

BACKGROUND

I. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

¶2 For more than 25 years, the State has permitted its agencies to adopt an incentive program intended to both reduce the misuse of sick leave and to induce persons to work for the State in spite of generally better private-sector wages and benefits. This program originated in 1979 and has been subject to periodic legislative change since its inception. The program is currently titled the "Unused Sick Leave Retirement Option Program" (the Program), and is found in Utah Code section 67-19-14.2. Plaintiffs contend that the 2005 amendments to the Program, contained in H.B. 213, effect an unconstitutional taking of employees' unused sick leave benefits by retroactively devaluing already vested rights. The State counters that no rights vest until the date of actual retirement, and therefore the employees lack a constitutionally protected property interest in those unused sick leave hours.

A. Statutory History of Utah Code section 67-19-14.2

¶3 Our extensive research led to the discovery that by statute, the Legislature has occasionally changed the menu of benefits that could be acquired upon retirement in exchange for accrued and unused sick leave over the past 25 years, and that the Legislature has imposed varied restrictions on how those hours may be redeemed. We requested additional briefing on this statutory history because in their original briefs on appeal, both parties misstated the statutory history.

¶4 The most cursory reading of the statutory history discloses that since 1979 the Legislature has empowered state agencies to permit their respective employees to participate in some form of unused sick leave trade-in program. At its inception, the program permitted employees to "at the time of retirement" convert unused sick leave hours "into paid-up health and medical insurance."¹ Under this iteration of the statute, an employee could convert 100% of accrued sick leave hours into post-retirement health and medical insurance.²

¶5 Beginning in 1983, however, the Legislature changed the language of the statute to require employees to accept a cash pay-out for 25% of the accrued sick leave and medical and life insurance for the remaining 75%.³ This distinction between the sanctioned use of the 25% versus the 75% remained in effect until 1998 when the Legislature changed the statutory scheme again to permit an employee to apply 25% to either a cash-payout or a 401(k) contribution.⁴ Then in 2004, legislative modifications again allowed, but did not require, use of the entire 100% for medical and life insurance benefits.⁵

¶6 Due to the perceived desirability of the offered incentives, most state agencies have chosen to extend the offer to their employees, and many state employees have accordingly reserved unused sick leave for the purposes permitted by the Program. Participating State employees accrue sick leave hours at the rate of four hours per two-week pay period, and many have reserved, or "banked," a significant number of unused sick leave hours. As the Program has been administered, upon retirement, employees have been allowed to redeem these banked hours for prepaid medical and life insurance coverage or for other forms of cash-payouts. Generally, the Program has permitted employees to exchange eight unused sick leave hours for one full month's coverage of health insurance.⁶ Additional statutory provisions

⁴ See Utah Code Ann. § 67-19-14.2 (1983), (1988), (1993), (1998), (1999).

⁶ More specifically, the Program allows each retiring employee to receive continuing medical and life insurance benefits for up to five years or until age 65, whichever occurs first. As briefly mentioned above, under the post-2004 version of the Program, upon retirement an employee may redeem unused sick leave hours in two ways:

(1) An employee is paid for up to 25% of the unused accumulated sick leave at the employee's rate of pay at the time of retirement. The employee may choose to have money from this pay-out transferred directly to the deferred compensation plan qualified under section 401(k) of the Internal Revenue permit employees to apply the remaining unused sick leave hours to medical and life insurance coverage for spouses and other dependents once the employee reaches the age of Medicare eligibility.⁷

¶7 Our own research has also led to the discovery that there have been widespread inconsistencies between the uses of unused sick leave hour redemption permitted by the statute and those allowed by state personnel regulations.⁸ In many instances, the regulations and practices appear to have permitted use of 100% of unused sick leave hours to be traded for medical and life insurance prior to 2004, although this practice was clearly unsupported by the statutory language between 1983 and 2004. In fact, legislative debate regarding the 2004 statutory amendment was represented by the bill's sponsors as intended to bring the statute into accord with the widespread practice of allowing retiring employees to apply all unused sick leave toward paid-up medical and life insurance at the rate of eight hours to one month of insurance.⁹

Code sponsored by the Utah State Retirement Board.

(2) An employee may purchase additional continuing medical and life insurance benefits, at the rate of one month's coverage per policy for eight hours of unused sick leave remaining after:

(a) the 25% cash out of 401(k) payout, if any;

(b) and an additional mandatory deduction of 480 hours of unused sick leave.

See Utah Code Ann. § 67-10-14.2(2) (2004).

⁷ Id. §§ 67-19-14.2(2), 67-19-14.2(4) (a).

⁹ The bill's sponsor, Representative David Clark, introduced the bill by stating that "[i]n fact, the purpose of this legislation is to make clarifying changes only that are based on current agency interpretations and implementations of practice. There are no substantive changes that are meant or to be included in this draft." Audio recording: House Debate of H.B. 11, 55th Leg., Gen. Sess. (Feb. 10, 2004), available at <http://le.utah.gov/asp/audio/index.asp?Sess=2004GS&Day=0&Bill=HB0011&House=H> (emphasis added).

B. H.B. 213: An Amendment to the Program

¶8 Beginning in 2003, the Legislature expressed increasing concern with escalating health insurance costs facing the State under the Program. In a short span of five years, the costs to the State for already retired employees nearly doubled. Moreover, the State anticipated an additional increase in the next ten years of more than 300%. The Legislature responded to these concerns by modifying the Program in 2005 with H.B. 213. In essence, this modification returns to the 1983-2004 statutory scheme, although not the actual practice, which allowed only 75% of the unused sick leave to be redeemed for medical and life insurance. Under H.B. 213, the statutory scheme again limits the use of the other 25%: banked sick leave falls into one of two new programs, depending upon when the employee banked the sick leave hours.

¶9 "Program I" applies to all sick leave accrued prior to January 1, 2006, and implements a gradual, five-year phase-out of the guaranteed continuing medical and life insurance benefits (and the corresponding 480-hour automatic reduction of unused sick leave) that had been guaranteed under the original Program. Program I also eliminates the original Program's provision permitting employees to cash-out up to 25% of their unused sick leave and instead mandates that 25% be contributed to the employee's 401(k). Plaintiffs challenge the constitutionality of the Program I modifications as substantially reducing the value of what they believe to be a vested right to use all 100% of banked sick leave in exchange for post-retirement medical and life insurance at the rate of eight hours of leave to one month of insurance coverage.

¶10 "Program II", on the other hand, applies to all unused sick leave hours accrued after January 1, 2006. There is no dispute between the parties that the State may implement program changes with prospective effects. We find nothing erroneous in that agreement, and as a result, we need not address the provisions of H.B. 213 that apply to Program II.

C. The Parties

¶11 Plaintiffs Roes 1 through 5 have cumulatively banked more than 8,000 hours of unused sick leave prior to January 1, 2006.¹⁰ In banking this many hours of sick leave, Roe Plaintiffs took personal leave days rather than sick leave and often worked when ill. Roes 1 through 5 testified that they had been told that if they did not retire by December 16, 2005, they would not be able to utilize all of their banked sick leave hours to acquire medical and life insurance as they could have under the 2004 statutory scheme. Roes 1, 2, 4, and 5 are currently employed with the State; Roe 3 retired on August 1, 2005. The parties agree that a number of state employees retired prior to December 16, 2005, to preserve the greater benefit allowed under the 2004 language of the statute.

¹⁰ Plaintiffs' complaint asserts the following facts about Roes 1 through 5:

¶12 Acting in its role as the labor association representing the interests of current and former public employees on matters pertaining to public employment, UPEA commenced this suit along with Roes 1 through 5. The record reflects the extensive communication between UPEA and its members after the

(1) Roe 1 is 62 years old and has worked for the State for over 30 years. He has accumulated over 1,800 hours of unused sick leave and had planned to retire in 2006, but due to the changes implemented with H.B. 213, he plans to retire before the bill becomes effective. If he retires after the bill becomes effective, he loses nearly 5 years of health insurance coverage which would have been covered by his accrued unused sick leave.

(2) Roe 2 is 58 years old and has worked for the State for over 30 years. He plans on retiring upon turning 60 in 2007. Under the Program, his accumulated unused sick leave provides him with medical insurance until reaching 80 years and 10 months old. Under H.B. 213, however, his accrued unused hours will provide him with health insurance benefits only until he is 75 years and 7 months old, a difference of over 5 years of coverage.

(3) Roe 3 is 45 years old and has worked for the State for over 20 years. He has accumulated over 2,100 hours of unused sick leave. The effectiveness of H.B. 213 decreases the value of his unused sick leave coverage by 5 ½ years.

(4) Roe 4 is 51 years old and has worked for the State for over 20 years. Post-H.B. 213, Roe 4 loses 6 years of medical coverage.

(5) Roe 5 is 40 years old and has worked for the State for 14 years. She has accumulated over 700 hours of unused sick leave and has recently declined numerous employment offers from private employers, specifically relying on the State's health insurance benefits from the pre-H.B. 213 Program.

proposal of H.B. 213 and demonstrates that UPEA adequately represents the interests of its members in this case.

II. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

¶13 Plaintiffs UPEA and Roes 1 through 5 filed their complaint on June 29, 2005, in the district court and subsequently moved for a preliminary injunction to stay the effective date of H.B. 213 pending resolution of their constitutional challenge. The State opposed the injunction and moved for a dismissal based on the allegations of the pleadings. After briefing, the district court held evidentiary hearings on November 7, 9, 16, and 18, 2005. On December 8, 2005, the district court denied Plaintiffs' motions for a preliminary injunction and granted the State's motion for a judgment in its favor on the pleadings.

¶14 Plaintiffs petitioned this court on December 13, 2005, for an emergency stay on the effective date of the statutory changes to allow an appeal of the district court's decision. Absent such an emergency stay, the window of opportunity for employees otherwise in a position to realize the greater benefit of exchanging 100% rather than 75% of their unused sick leave for paid insurance upon retirement would have expired within three days of the matter reaching us. We granted the emergency stay on December 14, 2005, and enjoined, for at least until thirty days after the final disposition of this appeal, the implementation of H.B. 213's provisions insofar as they amend Utah Code section 67-19-14.2. The State filed a motion to vacate the order granting emergency relief and requested oral arguments on the matter, which we heard on December 15, 2005. The State argued that the petition did not meet the necessary standards we impose for such relief, but ultimately agreed to the ongoing injunction with the request that the court act with all possible haste so that the impending legislative session might deal with any necessary revisions of the scheme. We denied the State's motion to vacate the order granting emergency relief, and to facilitate expedited review of the matter on its merits, ordered Plaintiffs to perfect their appeal on or before December 29, 2005, ordered expedited briefing by the parties, and set oral argument on the merits for January 10, 2006.

¶15 Given the extremely short time allotted to each party to present its arguments in the briefs, the submissions were adequate. However, after oral argument, it became obvious to the court that important and influential matters had not been included in any briefing or argument by either party. Consequently, on January 23, 2006, we requested additional briefing. The parties had failed to address the complex history of the statutory scheme and its relevance to the constitutional challenge presented. Moreover, the parties insisted on staking out diametrically opposing positions, apparently without any thought of assisting the court in finding a principled, legally correct solution to the problem created by the obtuse language employed in the statute and the actual practice engaged in by the State over decades. Unfortunately, although the court requested the parties to address those questions that most concerned it, the parties chose in their supplemental briefs to either discount the importance of the issues raised by the court or failed to shed any meaningful light on the questions.

¶16 Ordinarily, in matters presented to the court, the parties and the court have the benefit of thoughtful and thorough analysis by both the parties and the lower court to expose and resolve questions. In the case of an expedited review of this sort, where the district court's order had not even been reduced to writing at the time the petition was presented to us for action, and the time for preparation of the briefs, record, and other supplemental materials necessary for our review has been shortened to the point of practical elimination, the usual help given to the court by the parties has been diminished.

¶17 Nevertheless, it is the obligation of the court to reach a conclusion on the questions presented. To not answer, or to refuse to answer under such pressure of time, and with inadequate help from the parties, is not an option. However, since there is no other authority available to review and correct our errors in judgment on the legal merits of the case presented should we wrongly decide the question of constitutionality of the statute, we are also required to do all that we can to discover, consider, and incorporate those legal and statutory elements that are critical to a correct decision. This we have labored to do.

¶18 It is also important to note that in a republican form of government, and as specified in our state constitution, the judicial power of the State is vested in this court. Moreover, judges must exercise that power only in accord with the law and the facts of the case, without regard to pressures brought by the other branches of government or special interests of any kind. This, too, we have labored to do. If media reports are accurate of threats by members of the Legislature to withhold salary increases for all state employees generally, and judicial salaries in particular, in an effort to force this court to act more quickly or to reach a certain result, then those making such threats fail to grasp the very core of the separation of powers doctrine and the value to the people of our state of a truly independent and responsible judiciary. Further, the suggestion in the briefing of the State that a decision unfavorable to the State's position might result in a negative impact on judicial retirement benefits, among others, might also be perceived as an unwise effort to appeal to personal interests, an effort that we reject as disrespectful of our function and therefore of the constitutional responsibilities of the judicial branch itself.

ANALYSIS

I. PLAINTIFFS MAY ASSERT A FACIAL CHALLENGE TO H.B. 213

¶19 When challenging the constitutionality of a statute, Plaintiffs carry the burden of establishing that the statute is "unconstitutional either on its face or as applied to the facts of the given case."¹¹ In this instance, because the statutory changes set forth in H.B. 213 are not yet effective, the parties may assert only a facial challenge. They concede that an as applied challenge would be improper.

¶20 The State contests the availability to Plaintiffs of a facial challenge, relying on United States v. Salerno, a case in which the United States Supreme Court required the challenger to establish that "no set of circumstances exists under which the [challenged] Act would be valid" in order to succeed.¹² However, in its reliance on Salerno, the State fails to acknowledge that both the United States Supreme Court and this court have discredited, at least to some extent, the application of the Salerno standard. The facts of this case present circumstances where Salerno is not the correct standard and need not be followed.

¶21 When state courts interpret their own state law, the United States Supreme Court has not required adherence to Salerno. The plurality opinion in City of Chicago v. Morales clarified that the "assumption that state courts must apply the restrictive Salerno test is incorrect as a matter of law; moreover it contradicts 'essential principles of federalism.'"¹³

¹¹ State v. Herrera, 1999 UT 64, ¶ 4 n.2, 993 P.2d 854; see also Smith Inv. Co. v. Sandy City, 958 P.2d 245, 251 (Utah Ct. App. 1998) (explaining that plaintiffs carry a "heavy burden" in facial challenges).

¹² 481 U.S. 739, 745 (1987).

We agree. The Court explained that because state courts are not bound by federal law when assessing the constitutionality of state law under state constitutions, they need not follow the narrow interpretation of facial challenges found in Salerno.¹⁴

¶22 The Morales Court also suggested, by referencing scholarly articles on the matter, that in state law cases in state courts, a more appropriate threshold for determining the validity of facial challenges may simply exist in establishing the substantive merits of the case--the unconstitutionality of the legislation.¹⁵

¶23 More importantly in this situation, we have rejected the Salerno standard in some instances and have discredited its universal application. For instance, in State v. Gardner, an Eighth Amendment Cruel and Unusual Punishment Clause case, we determined that the "[s]tate's reliance on the due process standard--'no set of circumstances exists under which the act would be valid' [from Salerno]-[was] . . . misplaced."¹⁶ We relied rather on the broader Supreme Court standard for cruel and unusual punishment cases found in Gregg v. Georgia.¹⁷

¶24 We have also declined to apply Salerno in takings cases. In Smith Investment Company v. Sandy City, for example, our court of appeals turned to the substantive law in determining whether a facial challenge was proper.¹⁸ In other words, the court looked specifically to the constitutionality of the legislation affecting the challenger's property.¹⁹ The court held that if plaintiffs do not allege "any injury due to the enforcement of the statute, there is as yet no concrete controversy regarding the application of the specific provisions and regulations. Thus, the only question before this court is whether the mere enactment of the statutes and regulations constitutes a taking."²⁰ This is an approach we endorse. Many other courts in the United States have likewise relied on the substantive merits of the takings claim in determining the validity of a facial challenge.²¹

¶25 Plaintiffs' facial challenge is validly brought under both United States Supreme Court jurisprudence and our own case law. As articulated by the Supreme Court in Morales, an essential principle of federalism is that states have the authority to create their own constitutional law when reviewing claims brought under their own state constitution. Here, Plaintiffs have filed their takings claim under the Utah Constitution in Utah state court. Consequently, we are not required to follow Salerno's "restrictive" test for facial challenges, and we elect not to in this instance. Rather, we conclude that because Plaintiffs UPEA and Roes 1 through 5 have undisputed standing, the ultimate test for the propriety of bringing a facial challenge lies in the substantive merits of the claim. Thus, our analysis turns on the question of whether H.B. 213 constitutes an unconstitutional taking as alleged.

II. THE RETROACTIVE APPLICATION OF H.B. 213 DOES NOT CONSTITUTE AN UNCONSTITUTIONAL TAKING

¶26 The thrust of Plaintiffs' claim is that the imposition of the retroactive provisions of H.B. 213 constitutes an unconstitutional taking of their vested property interest in the banked unused sick leave. Article I, section 22 of the Utah Constitution provides that "[p]rivate property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation." We have previously defined what constitutes a taking under this constitutional provision: "A 'taking' is 'any substantial interference with private property which destroys or materially lessens its value, or by which the owner's right to its use and enjoyment is in any substantial degree abridged or destroyed.'"²² Thus, to establish that H.B. 213 results in an impermissible taking, Plaintiffs must demonstrate that they have a protectable property interest in redeeming the banked sick leave hours for medical and life insurance and that provisions of H.B. 213 would result in the government's taking of that property.

A. Plaintiffs Do Not Have a Property Interest in the Specific Use of Their Unused Sick Leave

¶27 "A claimant must possess some protectable interest in property before [being] entitled to recover[y] under this [takings] provision."²³ In this case, Plaintiffs argue that exchanging their banked and unused sick leave hours for medical and life insurance at the rate authorized by the 2004 version of the statute is vested personal property to which they have a contractual right. As a general rule, public employment is governed by statute and legislative policy, and is therefore subject to change as thought best by the people, acting through their legislative representatives.²⁴ Nevertheless, the modification of the terms of public employment are subject to two common sense exceptions to the general rule: first, when a public employee has a vested contractual interest in retirement benefits;²⁵ or second, when the government entity has entered into an express or implied contract by voluntarily undertaking additional obligations beyond the relevant statutory requirements.²⁶ Plaintiffs argue that they have valid contractual rights under both exceptions. We disagree.

1. Plaintiffs lack vested contract rights.

¶28 Plaintiffs assert their interests under the first exception, claiming that a public employee has a vested contractual interest in exchanging 100% of the unused sick leave hours for medical and life insurance at retirement. We disagree.

¶29 Both parties argue that a public employee obtains vested rights to retirement benefits "only when he has satisfied all conditions precedent."²⁷ We agree that parties must satisfy all conditions precedent before the rights vest. The pivotal question is at what point state employees satisfy the requisite conditions precedent to vest a protectable property interest in using 100% of their unused sick leave hours for medical and life insurance.

¶30 As always, we first look to the plain language of the statute to determine the conditions precedent. Based on the statute and the accompanying regulations,²⁸ the State contends that the statutory scheme unambiguously dictates that an employee may not receive retirement benefits until that employee actually retires. Plaintiffs, on the other hand, interpret the statutory language to mean that any member who chooses to bank unused sick leave has a vested property interest to use that sick leave for medical and life insurance benefits at retirement. We disagree with both parties' statutory interpretations.

¶31 Instead, we find the statutory language ambiguous as to when an employee's right to redeem the unused sick leave for medical and life insurance vests. Section 67-19-14.2 states that "[a]n agency may offer the []Program to an employee who is eligible to receive retirement benefits in accordance with Title 49, Utah State Retirement and Insurance Benefit Act."²⁹ One might expect Title 49 to provide direction on the conditions precedent necessary for an employee to be "eligible to receive retirement benefits."

¶32 Title 49, however, fails to clarify when an employee is "eligible to receive retirement benefits." The Title, with its eight parts and forty-four statutory sections, speaks of "service credits," "benefits," and "allowances" but fails to explain the distinctions, including when an employee is eligible for each. The State argues that retirement benefits are synonymous with "allowances." Plaintiffs, on the other hand, argue that if an employee is earning service credits, an employee is eligible for retirement benefits but not for allowances. Our research indicates that neither retirement benefits nor allowances are used to define or explain one another, and that employees are generally eligible for service credits upon the effective date of employment.³⁰

¶33 Absent clear language regarding or an obvious interpretation of "eligible to receive retirement benefits" in section 67-19-49 and Title 49, we conclude that the statutory language is ambiguous. It is clearly capable of more than one logical meaning within the statutory scheme. For example, a state employee might be "eligible to receive retirement benefits" when she reaches the length of service required for retirement and the age required for retirement, and submits her signed notice of retirement to the appropriate office or official of state government. Alternatively, one might be "eligible to receive retirement benefits" when reaching the service and age minimums, even if he continues to work. Additionally, one might be considered "eligible to receive retirement benefits" when one is employed in a full-time position by the State, in an agency or position for which there exists a retirement program under the extensive provisions of Title 49. While one or more of these possibilities may seem more logical, useful, or fair than another, such is not the question we face. Unable to accurately discern from the naked language alone which of the possible meanings is the meaning intended by the legislative drafters, we have no choice but to examine other appropriate evidence of what meaning is correct.

²⁸ For example, R477-7-6 of the Human Resource Management Regulations Governing Sick Leave and Sick Leave Retirement Benefits found in the Utah Administrative Code states that "[u]pon retirement from active employment, an employee may be offered a retirement benefit program, according to Section 67-19-14(2)."

²⁹ Utah Code Ann. § 67-19-14.2(b) (emphasis added).

¶34 Moreover, the plausible interpretations of the isolated word "eligible" in both section 67-19-14.2 and Title 49 also render the statutory language ambiguous. The State suggests that one is "eligible" when one is "qualified" to receive an allowance.³¹ UPEA, on the other hand, argues that because Title 49 never refers to "eligibility" in relation to allowance but rather only in respect to service credits, "eligible to receive retirement benefits" cannot be synonymous with "qualified to receive an allowance."

¶35 Furthermore, our prior case law suggests that "eligible to receive retirement benefits" is an ambiguous phrase. In Hansen v. Public Employees Retirement System Board of Administration, for instance, we struggled with how to define eligibility for retirement benefits.³² We held there that an employee "who has neither served the necessary years to qualify for pension, nor attained the retirement age[] has no vested rights in the pension or retirement system"³³ and that since the plaintiff had "neither served the time requisite to entitle him to retire and receive a pension, nor had he attained retirement age," he had no vested rights in a pension or the retirement system.³⁴ This interpretation adds to the ambiguity because it implies that an employee may be eligible to receive retirement benefits upon attaining retirement age, serving a requisite number of years, qualifying for retirement benefits, or some combination thereof.

¶36 Consequently, we conclude that section 67-19-14.2 lacks a clear meaning for "eligible to receive retirement benefits" because the language gives rise to several plausible interpretations. As noted, it may refer to the time at which the employee walks out of the building for the last time and actually retires, or perhaps to the point when, after having worked for the State the requisite number of years to receive contributions to the Utah Retirement System, the employee chooses yet to continue state employment. It may also mean the condition described under Utah Code sections 49.12.201, 49.13.201, 49.14.201 and any of the other general membership requirements to the sixteen retirement acts listed under Title 49.³⁵ Each of those sections applies to any full-time employee whose employer chose to participate in the described program and who is earning service credits. Both the statutory language and Utah case law are ambiguous as to whether employees' property rights vest at eligibility for retirement, actual retirement, or eligibility for the payout.

¶37 We accordingly turn to the available indications of legislative intent to determine at what point all conditions precedent are satisfied for the vesting of employees' right to redeem unused sick leave for medical and life insurance under the Program.³⁶ The legislative intent behind these particular retirement benefits is clearly stated as "inducements to work for the state"³⁷ and "to reduce sick leave abuse."³⁸ Logically, no incentive exists if, as the State urges, the agency may offer the benefit only on the occasion of the employee leaving his or her state job by retirement. A benefit not known until the very day on which the employee can do nothing to earn it, is no incentive at all.

¶38 In fact, the undisputed evidence before the district court was that state agencies routinely described the availability of the sick leave conversion to prepaid medical and life insurance at retirement to their employees for the very purpose described in the statute: to encourage state employees to remain state employed in the face of lower wages than available elsewhere, and to encourage limited use of sick leave.

¶39 Thus, we conclude that state agencies inviting employees to participate in the Program during the course of their state employment constituted an offer by the State.

¶40 We also conclude, however, that the State's offer was to exchange the unused sick leave for a benefit upon retirement, but not necessarily any particular benefit. The various changes in the statutory scheme from 1979 to 2004 clearly demonstrate that the Legislature intended to reserve the ability to modify the menu of available benefits, and did not intend to bind the State forever to redeem 100% of the unused sick leave hours for any one use, and in particular not necessarily for medical and life insurance.

¶41 The critical issue is at what point employees can act to accept the offer to redeem banked sick leave exclusively for medical and life insurance. This is an important question because employees' property interest to use these accrued hours for medical and life insurance vests only after an acceptance of the State's offer to redeem them in such a way.

¶42 In our review of the statutory language and relevant legislative history, we are compelled to conclude that the State intended employees to accept the offer to redeem the hours for unused sick leave only upon retirement. For example, the regulations promulgated pursuant to the statute provide that "[u]pon retirement from active employment, an employee may be offered a retirement benefit program, according to Section 67-19-14.2."³⁹ We can only interpret this to mean that at the time of retirement an employee is offered a choice of the manner in which the hours may be exchanged for other benefits of value. Those choices can only be from those delineated in the then-current statutory version of the Program. Only at that point may the employee accept that particular offer to redeem the hours in the manner set forth in the current statute. Moreover, as a matter of ordinary contract law, until accepted, the State's offer is subject to unilateral modification. Thus, a property interest in accumulated sick leave hours for the specific purpose of exchanging them for paid medical and life insurance cannot vest, as a matter of law, until the employee retires. The result is that the first exception to the general rule is of no consequence in our analysis of Plaintiffs' claims.

2. The State undertook a voluntary obligation.

¶43 Nevertheless, a contract in a public employment setting may also arise if the State "voluntarily undertake[s] an additional duty that it would otherwise have no obligation to perform."⁴⁰ Plaintiffs argue that their contractual rights exist because State agencies did exactly that in offering the Program to their employees.

¶44 The State, on the other hand, argues that in permitting agencies to choose whether to offer employees the benefits of the Program, those agencies failed to undertake an additional obligation beyond statutory terms,⁴¹ since the statutory scheme authorized the offer. The State misinterprets prior Utah cases on the issue. The cases to which the State cites, namely, Buckner v. Kennard,⁴² Knight v. Salt Lake County,⁴³ and Hom v. Utah Department of Public Safety,⁴⁴ deal specifically with changes to prospective compensation, hiring procedures, or other employment structures controlled only by statute and which the State required the involved agencies to adopt. The statutory terms at issue in those instances were not regarding additional duties that the agencies "would otherwise have no obligation to perform."⁴⁵

¶45 With the Program at issue in this case, however, state agencies had no obligation to offer the incentives found in Utah Code section 67-19-14.2 to their employees. Instead, the Legislature specifically constructed the statute to state that "[a]n agency may offer the Unused Sick Leave Retirement Option Program" to its employees.⁴⁶ Therefore, in choosing to offer the Program, state agencies volunteered to undertake the additional duty of providing enhanced retirement benefits in exchange for the employee taking fewer sick days and for staying with the State until retirement. This constituted a valid offer to redeem unused sick leave hours upon retirement.

¶46 Nevertheless, the critical question remains at what point in time employees are able to accept the offer. As described above, employees may not accept this offer until retirement. The State's offer of various pay-out options, specifically, the 401(k), cash-out, or medical and life insurance coverage, can only be accepted when employees retire. At that point, an employee chooses how to redeem accumulated unused sick leave from the options then available, and the State is bound. Until that time, however, the State retains the ability to modify terms of the offer as needed or prudent.⁴⁷

¶47 Therefore, although the State voluntarily undertook an obligation to employees who bank unused sick leave to allow those employees to eventually redeem unused sick leave hours for value, the State's offer does not lock in the method of pay-out until retirement. Consequently, it cannot be said that the State voluntarily undertook an obligation to permit employees to redeem 100% of their unused sick leave hours for medical and life insurance. Absent this specific voluntary obligation by the State, employees have no protectable property interest in redeeming all or any of those hours for medical and life insurance until they reach actual retirement and make the appropriate election from among the then-available options.

B. We Need Not Address Whether H.B. 213 Materially Lessens the Value of Plaintiffs' Property Interest

¶48 Because the ability to redeem 100% of the banked unused sick leave hours for a particular purpose does not vest until the employee makes a choice at the time of retirement, the option of using them all for paid insurance is not personal property and cannot be taken by the State. Consequently, we need not consider the second prong of the takings analysis, namely, whether H.B. 213 substantially interfered with the unused sick leave hours in a manner that destroyed or materially lessened their value or abridged or destroyed employees' use or enjoyment of them in any substantial degree.⁴⁸ Because Plaintiffs lack a constitutionally protected property interest in redeeming 100% of their unused sick leave hours for medical and life insurance, their takings claim fails.

CONCLUSION

¶49 Plaintiffs UPEA and Roes 1 through 5 have properly raised a facial challenge to H.B. 213. Their facial challenge fails on the merits because implementation of H.B. 213 does not result in an unconstitutional taking under the Utah Constitution. Plaintiffs have no present property interest in redeeming their unused sick leave hours for medical and life insurance because (1) although the State voluntarily offered to undertake a contractual duty with them, State employees cannot accept the offer specifying the form of redemption until retirement, and (2) Plaintiffs contractual rights cannot vest until that offer has been accepted. Further fact finding regarding a vital state interest and a substantial substitute are unnecessary because Plaintiffs lack a constitutionally protected property interest. Thus, we conclude that H.B. 213 does not effect a taking of property and is therefore constitutional under article I, section 22 of the Utah Constitution.

¶50 The decision of the trial court is affirmed. The stay and injunction imposed by this court is vacated, effective 30 days from the date of this opinion. Further relief is denied.

¶51 Chief Justice Durham and Judge Greenwood concur in Associate Chief Justice Wilkins' opinion.

¶52 Having disqualified himself, Justice Durrant does not participate herein; Utah Court of Appeals Judge Pamela T. Greenwood sat.

PARRISH, Justice, concurring:

¶53 I agree with the lead opinion's conclusion that H.B. 213 does not effect an unconstitutional taking of plaintiffs' property. I write separately to express my opinion that state employees had no vested right to exchange their accrued sick leave for health insurance because the plain language of the 2004 version of the Unused Sick Leave Retirement Option Program ("Option Program"), Utah Code Ann. § 67-19-14.2, limited participation in the program to those employees eligible to receive retirement benefits. Accordingly, state agencies could offer the program only to those employees who had elected to retire. Further, were I to assume the existence of a statutory ambiguity with regard to the vesting issue, I would conclude that extrinsic evidence of legislative intent and relevant principles of statutory construction dictate the same result.

¶54 Plaintiffs raise only one claim on appeal, a facial challenge to the constitutionality of H.B. 213. Resolution of their facial challenge hinges on whether they can establish that they had a vested right to exchange 100% of their accrued sick leave for insurance. If so, H.B. 213 effects an unconstitutional taking of their property. If not, their challenge fails.

¶55 As the lead opinion correctly states, because the terms of public employment are generally governed by statute and legislative policy, they are subject to legislative change. We have recognized only two exceptions pursuant to which a public employee may acquire a contractual interest in employment benefits. The first is when a governmental employer has entered into an express or implied contract by voluntarily undertaking obligations beyond those provided by statute. See Canfield v. Layton City, 2005 UT 60, ¶ 16, 122 P.3d 622. The second is when an employee acquires a vested contractual interest pursuant to the terms of the operative statute. See Hansen v. Pub. Employees Ret. Sys., 246 P.2d 591, 595-96 (Utah 1952). I will address each exception in turn.

I. PLAINTIFFS CANNOT ESTABLISH ANY PROPERTY INTEREST
PURSUANT TO THE VOLUNTARY UNDERTAKING EXCEPTION

¶56 To give rise to a protectable property interest under the voluntary undertaking exception, the voluntary undertaking must stem from an agreement that alters or adds to the statutory terms and conditions of public employment. See Buckner v. Kennard, 2004 UT 78, ¶ 34, 99 P.3d 842. This exception appears inapplicable in a case such as this where plaintiffs have raised only a facial challenge to the governing statute.

¶57 As the trial court found, the plaintiffs in this case rested their claims entirely on the statutory language. Plaintiffs presented no evidence and the trial court made no finding of any obligation or undertaking by state agencies apart from the decision of the agencies to participate in the Option Program as set forth in the governing statute. While agency participation in the Option Program was voluntary, the terms of that participation were indisputably statutory. Because plaintiffs lodge only a facial challenge to H.B. 213, their voluntary undertaking argument is entirely dependent upon the statutory language, which, as discussed below, dictates that any offer of program benefits may occur only upon retirement.

II. THE PLAIN STATUTORY LANGUAGE DOES NOT CREATE ANY VESTED RIGHTS IN STATE EMPLOYEES UNTIL THEY ELECT TO RETIRE

¶58 I believe that the statutory language is determinative in resolving plaintiffs' claim that they had a vested right to exchange 100% of their unused sick leave for health insurance. In prior cases involving the claims of public employees, we have reasoned that the nature of the rights at issue "rest largely upon the language of the particular statute" involved. Driggs v. Utah Teachers Ret. Bd., 142 P.2d 657, 663 (Utah 1943); see also Newcomb v. Ogden City Pub. Sch. Teachers' Ret. Comm'n, 243 P.2d 941, 944 (Utah 1952) ("[T]he rights of pensioners must be determined by the purpose and language of the retirement act.").

¶59 When construing statutory language, this court adheres to the well-accepted rule that we do "'not look beyond the plain language of [the] provision unless we find some ambiguity in it.'" State v. Ostler, 2001 UT 68, ¶ 7, 31 P.3d 528 (alteration in original) (quoting In re Worthen, 926 P.2d 853, 866 (Utah 1996)); Wilcox v. CSX Corp., 2003 UT 21, ¶ 8, 70 P.3d 85. Only upon finding ambiguity may we "seek guidance from the legislative history and relevant policy considerations." Ostler, 2001 UT 68, ¶ 7 (internal quotation marks omitted). In other words, we may not resort to extrinsic aids of interpretation unless we first find ambiguity in the statutory text. See id.

¶60 Like a contract, a statute is ambiguous when it may reasonably "be understood to have two or more plausible meanings." Alf v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 850 P.2d 1272, 1274 (Utah 1993) (internal quotation marks omitted) (defining ambiguity in the context of a contract); Saleh v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2006 UT 1, ¶ 15, ___ P.3d ___. But determining whether there are two or more plausible meanings depends not only on the text of the particular provision at issue, but also on the text of the statute as a whole. See Morton Int'l v. Auditing Div. of the Utah State Tax Comm'n, 814 P.2d 581, 591 (Utah 1991). Indeed, "[w]e 'read the plain language of the statute as a whole, and interpret its provisions in harmony with other statutes in the same chapter and related chapters.'" State v. Barrett, 2005 UT 88, ¶ 29, ___ P.3d ___ (quoting Miller v. Weaver, 2003 UT 12, ¶ 17, 66 P.3d 592). As a result, a statute susceptible to competing interpretations may nevertheless be unambiguous if the text of the act as a whole, in light of related statutory provisions, makes all but one of those meanings implausible. Id. When viewing the act as a whole does not eliminate duplicative yet plausible meanings, the statute is ambiguous, and we may resort to extrinsic interpretive tools to resolve the ambiguity. See Ostler, 2001 UT 68, ¶ 7.

¶61 As the lead opinion ably explains, the statutory iterations of the Option Program from 1983 through 2004 all required that employees convert at least 25% of their accrued sick leave to cash or a 401(k) contribution. In all respects material to this appeal, these prior iterations are therefore indistinguishable from H.B. 213. As a result, only the 2004 iteration of the Program could have conceivably vested in state employees the right to convert to health insurance the first 25% of their accrued sick leave. I therefore confine my analysis to the 2004 statute.

¶62 The 2004 statute provides that "[a]n agency may offer the [Option Program] to an employee who is eligible to receive retirement benefits in accordance with Title 49, Utah State Retirement and Insurance Benefit Act." Utah Code Ann. § 67-19-14.2(1)(b) (2004). The lead opinion concludes that this language is ambiguous because it could be construed to apply to (1) all regular, full-time state employees; (2) all state employees who have reached the requisite age and years of employment necessary to retire under a particular retirement system; or (3) retiring employees. I disagree and conclude that the statutory language effectively precludes agencies from even offering the Option Program until an employee has elected to retire.

¶63 My analysis necessarily starts with "the usual and natural meaning" of the operative terms of the statute. See Saleh, 2006 UT 1, ¶ 17 (internal quotation marks omitted). "Offer" is a verb meaning "an instance of presenting something for acceptance." Black's Law Dictionary 1113 (8th ed. 2004). "Eligible" is an adjective referring to one who is "legally qualified for a[] . . . privilege, or status," or "[f]it and proper to . . . receive a benefit." Id. at 559. "Receive" is a verb meaning "to come into possession of." Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary 975 (10th ed. 1998). And because the statute is phrased in the present tense, it allows an agency to offer the "Program to an employee who is eligible to receive retirement benefits," not to an employee who may become or who could be eligible to receive benefits some time in the future. Utah Code Ann. § 67-19-14.2(1)(b) (emphasis added). Moreover, subsection (2) of the statute specifically states that an employee may purchase continuing medical and life insurance benefits "upon retirement." Id. § 67-19-14.2(2).

¶64 The commonly understood definitions of these operative terms dictate that state agencies could present the Option Program for acceptance only to those employees who were currently, legally qualified to come into possession of retirement benefits. This renders implausible the interpretation urged by plaintiffs, that the language allowed state agencies to offer the Option Program to all regular, full-time employees. It also undercuts the suggestion that the statute could plausibly be interpreted to allow agencies to offer the Option Program to employees with the requisite age and years of service necessary to enable them to retire but who have not elected to do so. Indeed, it is implausible to suggest that an employee who has not yet elected to retire could be eligible to receive (as opposed to be eligible to apply for) benefits. I therefore conclude that the text of section 67-19-14.2 prevents an agency from offering the Option Program until an employee elects to retire.

¶65 The majority rejects this interpretation as implausible because it believes such an interpretation is inconsistent with the stated legislative purpose of the program, which is to induce employees to reduce sick leave abuse. I find no such inconsistency. The fact that the program did not vest employees with the contractual right to exchange 100% of their accrued sick leave for health insurance does not necessarily mean that it could not operate as an effective incentive program.

¶66 Individuals routinely assume some degree of risk in making life decisions, and there is no reason why employees would necessarily require an iron-clad guarantee before being motivated to reduce sick leave abuse. Nearly all aspects of compensation and retirement benefits in both the public and private sectors are offered as inducements to accept employment. But that does not mean that those benefits become immutable contractual guarantees as soon as an employee begins work or that any employee can reasonably expect that an employer will be offering the same benefits decades into the future. This principle is aptly illustrated by the fact that the pre-2004 iterations of the Option Program did not even include the option of exchanging the first 25% of accrued sick leave for health insurance. It is also illustrated by the majority's tacit assumption that the statutory purpose of reducing sick leave abuse is fulfilled by its construction of the statute--a construction that in practical effect differs not at all from the interpretation urged by the State and adopted by me.

¶67 My plain language construction of the Option Program is bolstered by the language of title 49 of the Utah Code, which is referenced in the 2004 statute. Title 49 of the Utah Code consists of the Utah State Retirement and Insurance Benefit Act. Chapter 11 of that act governs the administration of the system, while chapters 12 through 21 establish various retirement systems for specific classes of public employees. Although some of the specific provisions of these various systems differ, the statutory structure of each follows a similar pattern, and each is consistent with my conclusion that eligibility to receive retirement benefits can occur only when an employee elects to retire.

¶68 First, each of the various systems distinguishes those employees who are merely eligible to participate in the retirement system from those employees who are eligible to receive an allowance from the system. Membership in the system is available to all "regular full-time employee[s] of a participating employer" and begins on "the effective date of employment." Utah Code Ann. § 49-12-201 (2002); see, e.g., id. §§ 49-13-201, 49-14-201 (Supp. 2005). When the legislature referred to the class of employees eligible for participation in one of the state retirement systems, it used the phrase "eligible for service credit." Because eligibility for service credit differs from eligibility to receive retirement benefits, I reject the plaintiffs' contention that the phrase "eligible to receive retirement benefits" could plausibly be interpreted to refer to all regular, full-time state employees.

¶69 I find the provisions of title 49 addressing eligibility to receive allowances particularly helpful. For example, Utah Code section 49-12-401 (2002) provides:

(1) A member is qualified to receive an allowance from this system when:

(a) the member ceases actual work for a participating employer in this system before the member's retirement date and provides evidence of the termination;

(b) the member has submitted to the office a notarized retirement application form that states the member's proposed retirement date; and

(c) one of the following conditions is met as of the member's retirement date:

(i) the member has accrued at least four years of service credit and has attained an age of 65;

(ii) the member has accrued at least ten years of service credit and has attained an age of 62 years;

(iii) the member has accrued at least 20 years of service credit and has attained an age of 60 years; or

(iv) the member has accrued at least 30 years of service credit.

Each of the various retirement acts comprising title 49 contains a similar provision. See, e.g., id. §§ 49-13-401, 49-14-401 (Supp. 2005), 49-15-401 (2002).

¶70 At first glance, because these provisions use the phrase "qualified to receive an allowance," they do not appear to clarify the meaning of the phrase "eligible to receive retirement benefits" as used in section 67-19-14.2. But further examination of title 49 demonstrates that the legislature used the terms "allowance" and "retirement benefits" interchangeably. See, e.g., id. §§ 49-12-402(2) (Supp. 2005) (the "Option One benefit is an annual allowance"), 49-12-405, (4) (referring to Option Three allowance as "[s]ervice retirement benefits" and stating that "benefits payable under this section are retirement benefits"), 49-11-401(3)(b) ("[a]n allowance or other benefit"), 49-11-405(3) (2002) (referring to a "member's allowance" as "benefit"). Moreover, the notion of being qualified or eligible to actually "receive" an allowance or benefit is common to both section 67-19-14.2 and section 49-12-401. They therefore support my conclusion that those employees who are "eligible to receive retirement benefits" must have satisfied the conditions specified by section 49-12-401 for receipt of an allowance.

¶71 Justice Nehring opines that my conclusion in this regard is undercut by other provisions of title 49. In fact, however, much of his analysis improperly draws on sources extrinsic to the statutory language. He suggests that the phrase "eligible to receive retirement benefits" is distinct from the phrase "qualified to receive an allowance" by drawing a distinction between the terms "eligible" and "qualified."¹ But this distinction stems from an inspection of the statutory language of pre-2004 versions of section 67-19-14. Prior to 2004, the statute provided that "[a]n employee must be eligible for retirement benefits to qualify for the program." Utah Code Ann. § 67-19-14 (Supp. 1999). Because the predecessor versions of the 2004 statute used both "eligible" and "qualify," Justice Nehring concludes that these words cannot be ascribed the same meaning. He then suggests that, because legislative history indicates that the legislature did not wish to make substantive changes when passing the 2004 version of the statute, the reference to title 49 must have implicitly preserved the distinction found in prior iterations of the program. Finally, Justice Nehring construes "eligible to receive retirement benefits" to mean "eligible to retire." I pause to briefly respond to these contentions.

¶72 First, we may not look to extrinsic aids to ascertain the meaning of a statute where the statute is plain on its face. Past versions of a statute and legislative history are indisputably extrinsic aids. As such, they may be helpful in resolving an ambiguity, but they may not be employed to create one. As discussed above, the plain meaning of the statute is that an agency may not offer the Option Program to an employee until she elects to retire. Where the statutory meaning is plain, resort to past versions of the statute and legislative history is improper. Moreover, because the 2004 version of the statute does not use both "eligible" and "qualify," the dichotomy that Justice Nehring attempts to create between the two terms does not logically become an issue.

¶73 In fact, the words "eligible" and "qualified" are synonymous, and our case law does not mandate a distinction between the two in the context of the Option Program. We have stated that we give effect to each term of a statute and assume that the legislature used each term advisedly. State v. Barrett, 2005 UT 88, ¶ 29, ___ P.3d ___. But this does not mean that we must, in all cases, ascribe competing meanings to synonymous terms found in the same statute. This is particularly true here where Title 49 uses the words "qualified," "eligible" and their variants interchangeably. Compare Utah Code Ann. § 49-11-401(3)(c) (Supp. 2005) (instructing the board to regulate how service credits should "be credited toward qualification for retirement" (emphasis added)), and id. § 49-11-403(1)(c) (providing that an employee may purchase service credits based on out-of-state public employment where she "does not qualify for any retirement benefits based on the employment" (emphasis added)), with id. § 49-11-404(2)(d) (2002) (basing cost-of-living increase factor "on the date the member is eligible to receive benefits under a benefit protection contract" (emphasis added)). Therefore, while Justice Nehring concludes that the legislature used the word "qualify" rather than the phrase "be eligible" in pre-2004 iterations of the statute for the sole purpose of signaling that "eligible" means less than "legally qualified," I cannot make that inferential leap.

¶74 More fundamentally, Justice Nehring defines "eligible" as "able to choose." But the prevailing definition of "eligible" is "qualified to be chosen." Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary 374 (10th ed. 1998). If we insert this definition into the 2004 statute, it reads, "An agency may offer the [Option Program] to an employee who is [qualified to be chosen] to receive retirement benefits." Because the State may not require an employee to receive retirement benefits before the employee fulfills all the requirements of Utah Code section 49-12-401, including filing an application to retire, Justice Nehring's interpretation is unavailing. In other words, the State may not require that an employee actually receive retirement benefits before the employee has applied for retirement.

¶75 In addition to relying on prior versions of the statute, Justice Nehring relies on legislative history for the proposition that the 2004 amendment was not intended to make any substantive changes to the Program. But in the absence of ambiguity, reliance on legislative history is improper. And if the legislative history of the 2004 statute truly indicates no intent to make substantive changes to the Program, it is patently unreliable because plaintiffs' only claim arises as a result of a substantive change wrought by the 2004 amendment.² Thus, Justice Nehring's conclusion that the phrase "qualify for the program" is functionally equivalent to the phrase "in accordance with Title 49" in the 2004 statute has no basis. Indeed, it is not unreasonable to conclude that the reference to title 49 in the 2004 statute was intended to codify the pre-2004 regulation providing that "the decision to participate [in the Option Program] shall be made at retirement." Utah Admin. Code r.477-7-6(b) (2000).

¶76 Justice Nehring also relies on other provisions of title 49. But none of these provisions establish the meaning of the phrase "eligible to receive retirement benefits." For example, Justice Nehring points to the definition of "retirement" contained in Utah Code section 49-11-102(34) (Supp. 2005). It defines "retirement" as the status of an individual who has "become eligible, applies for, and is entitled to receive an allowance." Because eligibility to receive an allowance is only one of three components of "retirement," Justice Nehring concludes that eligibility to receive retirement benefits must refer to a status distinct from retirement. I disagree because the other two components of retirement (becoming eligible to apply for retirement and filing a retirement application) are conditions that must necessarily be fulfilled before one is eligible to receive an allowance. Thus, the definition of "retirement" may, in fact, be coextensive with the final act

necessary to effectuate retirement--eligibility to receive retirement benefits.³

¶77 In summary, I believe that the only way to read section 67-19-14.2 consistently with title 49 is to give "retirement benefits" the same meaning as "allowance." Therefore, section 67-19-14.2 grants authority to an agency to offer the Option Program to only those employees who have (1) ceased actual work, (2) submitted an application to retire, and (3) attained the requisite age and accumulated the requisite number of service credits. Given this construction of the statute, no public employee could have obtained a vested right in the Option Program prior to submitting an application to retire. In the absence of any vested rights, H.B. 213 cannot effect a taking.

III. ASSUMING AN AMBIGUITY IN THE STATUTE, APPLICABLE CANONS OF STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION DICTATE THE SAME RESULT

¶78 Were I to assume the ambiguity of the statute for argument's sake, I would nevertheless reject plaintiffs' contention that the statute endowed employees with a vested right to exchange 100% of their accrued sick leave for health insurance. I reach this conclusion on the basis of the statutory history of the Program, the implementing regulations, and what I believe to be the applicable canon of statutory construction.

¶79 There is a "well-established presumption" that "absent some clear indication that the legislature intends to bind itself contractually, . . . 'a law is not intended to create private contractual or vested rights but merely declares a policy to be pursued until the legislature shall ordain otherwise.'" Nat'l R.R. Passenger Corp. v. Atchinson, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 470

³ Justice Nehring also invokes sections 49-12-701 and 49-11-103(2). Neither applies. While section 49-11-103(2) suggests that title 49 should be liberally construed to provide maximum benefits, it does not go so far as to suggest that it may be invoked to create an ambiguity or to countenance a construction inconsistent with the statutory language. It is also questionable whether it even applies at all to our attempt to construe the provisions the 2004 statute, which is found in a different title of the Utah Code.

Section 49-12-701 is equally inapplicable. That section governed an early retirement program that has not been available since 1938. Its value in aiding our interpretation of the 2004 statute is therefore suspect.

U.S. 451, 465-66 (1985) (citation omitted). In other words, when it is unclear whether a legislature intends to bind itself, a court should not infer such an intent. Cf. id. Because section 67-19-14.2 lacks a "clear indication" that "the legislature intend[ed]" to bestow on state employees an irrevocable and unalterable property right to exchange 100% of their banked sick leave for health insurance, I would decline to find such a right.

¶80 This conclusion is not only mandated by the applicable canon of statutory construction, it is consistent with the legislative intent. As described in the lead opinion, the various changes in the Program from 1979 to 2004 demonstrate that the legislature intended to reserve its ability to modify the menu of available benefits. The changes in the program since its inception are, in fact, persuasive evidence that the legislature did not intend to bind the State to forever redeem 100% of accrued sick leave for health insurance benefits.

¶81 This conclusion is also consistent with the interpretation of the statute adopted by the Director of Human Resource Management in the applicable regulations. We previously have recognized that an agency's interpretation of a statute it administers may be given some weight. See McKnight v. State Land Bd., 381 P.2d 726, 731 (Utah 1963). In this case, the director has effectively interpreted the provision at issue by promulgating rules that explicitly allow an agency to offer the Option Program to an employee only "[u]pon retirement." Utah Admin. Code r.477-7-6 (2005). And the regulations also provide that state agencies may opt in and out of the Program on an annual basis, a provision that is wholly inconsistent with the claim of a vested contractual right at any point prior to an employee's election to retire. See id. Inasmuch as the regulatory interpretation is abundantly reasonable and consistent with the statutory language, I believe it should be given considerable weight.

CONCLUSION

¶82 Although I agree with the result reached by the majority, my reasoning differs. I conclude that both a plain meaning analysis and an analysis that assumes ambiguity lead to the conclusion that the 2004 statute empowered agencies to offer the Option Program to employees only upon retirement. Because the offer to participate in the Program could not be made until an employee elected to retire, plaintiffs have no vested contractual right to exchange 100% of their accrued sick leave for health insurance.

NEHRING, Justice, concurring:

¶83 I join Justice Wilkins's review of the statutory and procedural background of this case and note in particular my agreement with his cautionary remarks about perceived attempts to intrude on the constitutional obligations of this court to be the independent voice of the rule of law under our form of government. I also agree with Justice Wilkins that the plaintiffs have standing to bring their facial challenge to H.B. 213 and that their facial challenge fails. I therefore concur in the analysis of Part I and in the result of Part II(1), as well as with its conclusion that the language concerning the meaning of "eligibility to receive retirement benefits" in H.B. 213's predecessor statute is ambiguous.

¶84 Like Justice Parrish, I conclude that the statute that H.B. 213 supplanted survives facial attack on the strength of the presumption that the legislature cannot be bound unless it manifests a clear intention to create or vest a private property right. I find it unnecessary, however, to set out on a trek into the uncharted terrain of extrinsic evidence in the hope of resolving the ambiguity that infests the 2004 amendment to section 67-19-14.2, nor would I reach the question of whether the State undertook a voluntary obligation.

¶85 Although the lead opinion makes a persuasive case for the ambiguity of section 67-19-14.2, the close textual exegesis offered by Justice Parrish to defend her view that the statute plainly and unambiguously conditions "eligibility to receive retirement benefits" on actual retirement compels me to respond with a text-based analysis of my own that reaches the contrary result.

¶86 The portion of the text of the 2004 version of section 67-19-14.2 that bears on the question of whether the statute created a property right in the Option reads as follows:

- (1) (a) There is created the "Unused Sick Leave Retirement Option Program."
- (b) An agency may offer the Unused Sick Leave Retirement Option Program to an employee who is eligible to receive retirement benefits in accordance with Title 49, Utah State Retirement and Insurance Benefit Act.

Utah Code Ann. § 67-19-14.2(1)(a) & (b) (2004).

¶87 According to Justice Parrish, this provision cannot create a property right in the Option because an agency that chooses to adopt the Option program does not offer it to an employee until the employee has retired. This is not, of course, an interpretation that can be harvested from the plain language of the statute. An "employee who is eligible to receive retirement benefits" to whom the employer agency offers the Option need not necessarily be an employee who has retired. Indeed, it is plausible, and in my view probable, that the phrase is meant both to disqualify employees excluded or exempted from participation in one of the State's retirement systems, such as temporary employees, see, e.g., Utah Code Ann. § 49-12-203 (2002), and to make the offer available to employees who have satisfied the age and service requirements for retirement but who have not yet retired.

¶88 It is therefore clear that Justice Parrish's contention that the Option cannot be offered to an employee until the employee has retired must derive from the phrase "in accordance with Title 49, Utah State Retirement and Insurance Benefit Act." Utah Code Ann. § 67-19-14.2(1)(b). Although, as the lead opinion notes, Title 49 is comprised of eight parts and forty-four statutory sections, Justice Parrish relies exclusively on certain portions of Title 49 while overlooking others to make her case that the Option is offered to an employee only upon retirement.

¶89 Justice Parrish reasons that the clause "in accordance with" that links the phrase "an employee who is eligible to receive benefits" with "Title 49" means that Title 49 should be canvassed for a provision that offers a supplemental definition for just who "an employee who is eligible to receive benefits" might be. Justice Parrish believes she struck pay dirt in section 49-12-401 because that section details the status of an employee who "is qualified to receive an allowance from this system." According to Justice Parrish, such an employee is the same employee described as one "who is eligible to receive retirement benefits" in section 67-19-14.2(1)(b). Since the employee described in section 49-12-401 must have satisfied both the age and service condition for retirement and formally applied to retire, Justice Parrish urges us to import formal retirement into section 67-19-14.2(1)(b) as a condition precedent to becoming an offeree of the Option. Two fundamental flaws undermine her reasoning.

¶90 First, Justice Parrish's premise that the reference to Title 49 in section 67-19-14.2(1)(b) inevitably compels the importation of the restrictive formal retirement requirement of section 49-12-401 is erroneous. A review of the text of the version of section 67-19-14 that the 2004 amendment modified discloses why. That iteration of the conversion options available for unused sick leave states that "[a]n employee must be eligible for retirement benefits to qualify for the program." Utah Code Ann. § 67-19-14(1)(a)(iv) (1999).

¶91 This is a phrase that is less susceptible to competing interpretations than its 2004 successor. It communicates the unambiguous message that if a State agency offers a program that permits agency employees to convert their unused sick leave, an employee who has met the age and service requirements for retirement but who has not yet formally retired may participate. In fact, this language likely excluded employees who had, for example, retired before the genesis of an unused sick leave conversion program in 1975.

¶92 The phrase "[a]n employee must be eligible for retirement benefits to qualify for this program" has enjoyed an enduring presence within section 67-19-14. It first appeared in 1983. In that year, the legislature amended the unused sick leave conversion provision to accommodate the legislature's desire to supplement the original rationale for providing employees the opportunity to convert unused sick leave into health and medical insurance, that is, the reduction of sick leave abuse, with an incentive for state employees to retire early, with the goal of controlling the growth of the state workforce.¹ Utah Code Ann. § 67-19-14(2)(d). It was preserved when the statute was amended in 1998 and again in 1999. Did the 2004 amendment to section 67-19-14 result in a substantive change to pare back the class of those employees qualified to participate in the program to employees who had provided formal notice of retirement? No.

¶93 Neither the sponsor of the 2004 amendment nor anyone who rose in the legislature to speak to the merits of the amendment indicated that it would bring about any modification of the substance of the pre-amendment language. Yet, the State's reading of the 2004 amendment requires a dramatic interpretive shift to a meaning squarely at odds with the legislative history. This alone does not make the State's interpretation wrong.

¹ The early retirement program that was created by the 1983 amendments and which at that time was grafted onto section 67-19-14 was disconnected from the unused sick leave provisions and recodified in Title 49. Utah Code Ann. § 49-12-701.

Indeed, the legislative history of the amendment would be irrelevant if it proved to be at odds with the unambiguous plain meaning of its text. The 2004 amendment can, however, be read to conform its interpretation to the plain meaning of its predecessor eligibility language acknowledging that an employee acquired a property right in her unused sick leave without the need to submit formal notice of an intent to retire.

¶94 The central alteration made by the 2004 amendment to the then-existing eligibility language was the replacement of the concluding phrase "to qualify for the program" with "in accordance with Title 49, Utah State Retirement and Insurance Benefit Act." The concept of eligibility is not, however, displaced by the amending language. This is important. Even if we were to limit our inspection of Title 49 to the sections cited by Justice Parrish, we would nevertheless not be free to ignore the text of section 67-19-14.2(1)(b) that expressly renders the Option available to an employee "who is eligible to receive retirement benefits." (emphasis added).

¶95 It is significant that the pre-2004 statutes contained both the words "eligible" and "qualify." These two words persist in the 2004 amendment, but in an altered context. Because "eligible" and "qualify" appear prominently in every configuration of statutes relating to retirement, we take a closer look at them. The pre-2004 phrase "[a]n employee must be eligible for retirement benefits to qualify for the program" may be broken down into two components, one assembled around "eligible," and the other around "qualify." We start with the first half of the phrase, "[a]n employee must be eligible for retirement benefits." There is no ambiguity in this phrase, and thus no occasion to turn to extrinsic sources to divine its meaning. We first observe that "eligible" is a word brimming with potential. That is, to be eligible, one may be desirable, fully capable of choosing or being chosen, but still uncommitted. Just as a bachelor is eligible to marry by choosing to do so, eligibility is defined by the ultimate choice or step a party must complete in order to realize the matter. This is why a boy who is under the legal marriage age is not yet eligible to marry--there is no decision or step that the boy can make or take to allow him to marry. So it is with the issue now before us. An employee is eligible for retirement benefits when there exists an election that she can make to start benefits flowing. Such a point could not be on the employee's first day of work--presumably there is nothing the employee could do at that point to start to receive retirement benefits. However, without more information, we cannot be certain that the new employee is ineligible to receive retirement benefits because nothing in the statute explicitly states at what point an employee can choose to begin receiving those benefits. All the pre-2004 statute told us is that an employee must be eligible to "qualify for the program."

¶96 The most logical interpretation of the link between "eligible" and "qualify" is that the right to elect to receive retirement benefits--to be eligible for those benefits--is one, but not necessarily the only, requirement to access the program.

¶97 Therefore, it must be established when an employee would be qualified. The best answer is found in section 49-12-401, which tells us when a member is qualified to receive a retirement allowance. In essence, this section states that someone is qualified to receive an allowance when she has accrued a specified number of service credits and attained a certain age, and then ceased work and filled out the requisite paperwork. Therefore, one must ask, how can an employee become eligible to qualify? As discussed above, one is eligible when she can choose to effectuate the matter for which she is eligible. The only possible answer is that she is eligible to qualify when she has accrued the mandatory service credits and age, so that she can choose, at her discretion, when to complete the qualification requirements by ceasing work and filling out the retirement paperwork.

¶98 As mentioned above, the 2004 amendment to section 67-19-14 was not intended to effectuate any substantive changes to the statute, but merely to clarify its substance. This description of the amendment is supported by what was done to section 67-19-14.2(1)(b). There, the statute dropped "to qualify for the program" and replaced it with the language quoted above, "in accordance with Title 49, Utah State Retirement and Insurance Benefit Act." Where there may have been some initial doubt before as to where one could discover the qualifications for receiving the benefits provided by section 67-14-19, it was replaced with an explicit reference to Title 49. Of utmost importance is the fact that the term "eligible" remained in the statute while pointing to Title 49. The first line of section 49-12-401 states that "[a] member is qualified to receive an allowance from this system when," and then outlines the requirements for qualification as discussed above. The key is that although the word "qualify" was removed from the text of section 67-19-14.2, it was preserved by the reference to Title 49 which replaced it, and which begins by describing the qualification requirements. Therefore, the 2004 amendment must be read, as its predecessor read, that an agency can offer the program to an employee who is eligible to qualify for the program--in other words, to someone who has accrued the service credits and attained the age outlined by section 49-12-401, but who has yet to effectuate that eligibility by ceasing employment and filling out the retirement paperwork.

¶99 This understanding is enforced by a more in-depth look at Title 49. Justice Parrish's refusal to consider all the provisions of Title 49 severely undercuts her contention that an employee is not eligible to receive retirement benefits under section 67-19-14.2(1)(b) until she submits a formal application to retire. Taken as a whole, the content of Title 49 leads to the inexorable conclusion that an employee acquires a property interest in unused sick leave when she satisfies the age and service requirements for retirement. Section 49-11-102(34) defines "retiree" as "an individual who has qualified for an allowance under this title." This definition is in complete harmony with section 49-12-401 which, in sub-parts (b) and (c), requires the submission of a formal application to retire and satisfaction of age and service requirements before "[a] member is qualified to receive an allowance from this system." Put another way, the "member" in section 49-12-401 is a "retiree" as defined in section 49-11-102(34). It is obvious that not every "employee eligible to receive retirement benefits" is a retiree, yet under Justice Parrish's statutory interpretation, they must be.

¶100 Title 49's definition of "retirement" further exposes the weakness of Justice Parrish's invocation of section 49-12-401. Section 49-11-102(35) states that "'Retirement' means the status of an individual who has become eligible, applies for, and is entitled to receive an allowance under this title." Under this definition, the "member" identified in section 49-12-401 who is "qualified to receive an allowance" is a "retiree" as defined in Title 49 and has also entered the realm of "retirement" because she has met the three conditions for retirement: she has become eligible for retirement, she has applied for retirement, and she is entitled to receive an allowance. It is clear from the definition of retirement that eligibility to receive retirement benefits is a status different than retirement. Because the status defined as "retirement" is achieved by complying with the requirements of section 49-12-401 to file a formal application for retirement and to satisfy the age and service standards, and because mere eligibility to receive retirement benefits satisfies but one of the three elements of "retirement," an employee must logically be capable of being eligible to receive retirement benefits without filing a formal application to retire.

¶101 Section 49-12-701 underscores the point that under Title 49 an employee's eligibility to receive retirement benefits does not require an employee to file a formal application to retire. Title 49 defines the eligibility for and the benefits of early retirement. Section 49-12-701(1)(a) makes early retirement available if "the member is eligible for retirement under Section 49-12-401, or has 25 years of service credit." The only reasonable interpretation of this provision is that the right to choose to become a retiree under section 49-12-401, in other words to become "eligible" for retirement, is separate and independent from actually electing to retire and undertaking the tasks--most notably the submission of a formal application for retirement--necessary to make the employee "qualified to receive an allowance" under section 49-12-401.

¶102 Finally, Justice Parrish fails to explain why section 49-11-103(2) should be excluded from the provisions of Title 49 that should be considered under the "in accordance" directive of section 67-19-14.2. This section states that "[Title 49] shall be liberally construed to provide maximum benefits and protections consistent with sound fiduciary and actuarial principals [sic]."

¶103 While I have considerable confidence in the correctness of this textual interpretation, I do not discount the legitimacy of Justice Parrish's closely reasoned approach. I therefore stop short of asserting that my interpretation has won the day and that section 67-19-14.2 should be crowned with my reading as its sole, unambiguous reading. I am, instead, content to pursue the more modest objective of reinforcing the lead opinion's claim that the statute is ambiguous.

¶104 Having offered up my interpretation of the statute central to this appeal, I turn to interpreting the law that governs how an ambiguous statute that purports to create a vested private property right should be evaluated when confronted by a facial challenge to its constitutionality. The key feature of this law is the policy-based principle that the legislative branch should be free to respond to the changing needs and will of the people. The law acknowledges the fundamental need for legislative flexibility and accountability when it imposes more rigorous demands on those who would claim that the legislature has bound itself by statute to duties and obligations that may mature in the future to demonstrate with particular clarity the legislature's intent to assume such future duties. Owing to the unique policy considerations that attend to commitments made by the legislature, I would end the facial-challenge inquiry into whether a statute creates a vested property right upon a finding that the statute is ambiguous. It is unnecessary and contrary to the presumption against the creation of statutorily-vested property interests to take the next step typically taken when confronted with statutory ambiguity and examine extrinsic evidence, most notably legislative history, for guidance on the intent of the statute.

¶105 I hasten to add that although in this instance the State is rewarded for successfully enacting a statute remarkable for its impenetrability (during the course of this appeal I have mused over how a lawyer who might have been visited by a state employee in late 2004 would have responded to her request for an opinion concerning the status of her unused sick leave), any legislative body that chooses to adopt as a strategy the notion that there is victory in opacity would, besides betraying the trust of the people, find that outside the context of a facial challenge to a statute, ambiguity would offer scant defense against the claim of a vested property right.

¶106 The voluntary undertaking exception to the presumption against the statutory creation of vested property rights provides parties who believe that they have sustained damage through the unconstitutional deprivation of a statutorily-conferred property right the opportunity for redress under circumstances where no statute clearly creates that right. Buckner v. Kennard, 2004 UT 78, 99 P.3d 842. The lead opinion suggests that such a voluntary undertaking must supplement an expressly-created statutory obligation. This does not go far enough. Correctly understood, the exception includes the use of evidence of a voluntary undertaking to resolve a statutory ambiguity that bears on the existence and scope of a claimed vested property right. In this setting, evidence of a voluntary undertaking would be identical in its form and purpose to extrinsic evidence that we call upon routinely to aid in the resolution of statutory ambiguities. This formulation of the exception would thereby compliment my central proposition that the presence of ambiguity itself should defeat a claim that a statute has conferred a vested property right.
